

Bonding scheme for builders

Architects and chartered surveyors are backing a National Home Enlargement Bureau plan for protecting householders against builders going bankrupt while still working on home extensions (Derek Harris writes).

Mr Owen Luder, president of the Royal Institute of British Architects, said yesterday: "Our industry has been plagued by cowboy builders and unqualified designers for many years. This scheme will undoubtedly help to stamp them out." A fifth of all bankruptcies and company liquidations in 1980 concerned building contractors, he pointed out.

The Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors has also indicated it will back the scheme.

The success of the plan, which could be operating by the autumn, depends on bringing enough builders into the bonding scheme, which involves once-and-for-all membership payment by builders.

Those payments would provide the initial funding for a comprehensive insurance bonding arrangement which, if a builder was unable to finish off a house extension, would ensure completion without the householder in any extra costs. The home enlargement market is valued at about £1,000m a year.

Tory bar on Pope alleged Opposition from the Government has halted plans for the Pope to address both Houses of Parliament during his visit to Britain next month, according to Mr Norman St John-Stevens, a former Conservative Cabinet minister.

In his book on the Pope which is published today, Mr St John-Stevens, a prominent Roman Catholic, says: "Although this would have been acceptable to the Speaker and others responsible for the Palace of Westminster, it unfortunately did not find favour with the present Government."

Mr St John-Stevens does not enlarge on his proposal, but it had gone ahead until it was caused a furore among more extreme Protestants.

Ulster Alliance debate link

Northern Ireland's moderate Alliance Party debated the establishment of formal links with the SDP-Liberal Alliance at its conference over the weekend, but took no decision, agreeing instead to hold talks with SDP-Liberal Alliance leaders (Craig Seton writes from Belfast).

The Alliance Party believes that the SDP-Liberal partnership must first fully establish a joint policy on devolution, power-sharing and self-determination before the Alliance Party in Northern Ireland can consider formal ties.

Quick draw for Portisch

In the ninth round of the Phillips and Drew Kings chess tournament at County Hall, London, Portisch contented himself with a quick draw against Geller (Harry Golombek writes).

Karpov skillfully outplayed Miles to win and Spassky was too good for Mestel in some middle game complications.

Cosmetics ban

Protesters plan to distribute leaflets in Princes Street, Edinburgh, urging shoppers to boycott products made by Elida Gibbs as a protest against the use of animals in testing cosmetics. The company's goods include the Harmony and Sunilk hair care ranges.

Toxteth stoning

Two policemen were injured as youths stoned police cars in disturbances at Toxteth, Liverpool on Saturday. But Merseyside police said yesterday that the trouble was little more than usual and that the youths dispersed when the police moved in.

Council strike

Five hundred manual workers employed by Peterborough council, Cambridgeshire, intend to strike on Wednesday in protest at a decision by the Labour-controlled authority to give maintenance contracts to private companies.

Hunt for killer

More than 100 policemen were yesterday drafted into the suburb of Cantley, Doncaster, to hunt the killer of Mrs Edith Emily Paton, a widow, aged 83, who was found stabbed at her home in St Wilfred's Road on Saturday.

Royal visit fire alert

Security for today's expected visit to Cornwall by the Prince and Princess of Wales was stepped up last night after a fire-raiser tried to burn down a hotel near St Austell only 75 yards from the hotel where they are due to lunch.

McCarthy sides with Aslef on rostering

By Paul Routledge, Labour Editor

The McCarthy inquiry into train drivers' pay and conditions is expected to come down in favour of the militant footplatemen's union and against British Rail's demand for "flexible rostering".

Lord McCarthy, chairman of the Railway Staffs National Tribunal, has been left in no doubt during a tour of British Rail locomotive depots that the drivers will not surrender their eight-hour maximum working day even if he rules that they must.

He has privately conceded his dilemma that some face-saving formula must be found that will avert a new crisis in the industry while conceding that the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen (Aslef) has won the long-running dispute over changes in working practices.

One compromise formula being aired is for the McCarthy tribunal to rule that flexible rostering as presently proposed cannot be implemented, but in return that the footplatemen do not share in the general reduction to a 39-hour working week until they provide self-financing productivity concessions.

The timing of publication of his report is regarded as critical. British Rail believes it will be in its hands when it comes to a series of options on the subject to be discussed in any event be timed to influence the union's policy-making conference which opens in London on May 17.

Lord McCarthy's compromise formula did not meet with enthusiasm from the other two rail unions, the National Union of Railwaymen and the Transport Salaried Staffs Association, who have already accepted changes in working practices for their members.

Mr Clifford Rose, British Rail board member for industrial relations, has said that the industry will be "in a mess" if Lord McCarthy finds for the footplatemen.

A "judgement of Solomon" on those lines would be regarded as a defeat by British Rail management, who will announce huge losses when the industry's annual financial results are published on Wednesday. Aslef's campaign of one and two-day strikes earlier this year cost the industry an estimated £180m in lost revenue, said Sir Peter Parker, chairman of the British Railways board, who has staked his personal future on winning the dispute with the train drivers.

However, Lord McCarthy is understood to have confided during his tour of motive power depots at Euston, York, Polmadie in Glasgow, and Bristol that the only way to avoid another head-on clash would be to come down on the footplatemen's side by retaining the maximum guaranteed working day, while finding for the board on delaying introduction of the 39-hour week for drivers.

Union eases line on Sunday trading

From Donald Macintyre, Eastbourne

The prospect of widespread Sunday opening by shops, department stores and supermarkets was brought closer yesterday when the Union of Shop, Distributive and Allied Workers voted to set up a study into legislation on retail hours.

The union modified its 90-year-old policy of opposition to Sunday trading by agreeing to put a series of options on the subject to its 438,000 members when the study is completed in six months.

The union's conference at Eastbourne yesterday overwhelmingly approved a special policy document from the executive questioning whether "some greater flexibility and liberalisation of shopping hours" was not now inevitable.

Mr John Flood, the union's deputy general secretary, told the delegates: "If there is going to be a change, let it be a good one. Do we want to stand alone with the Lord's Day Observance Society and allow others to get on with the change? We cannot bury our heads in the sand."

Mr Flood recalled that, last week, the Banking, Insurance and Finance Union had contemplated a return to Saturday opening in banks, partly he said to prevent jobs going to USAEW members in department stores with banking facilities. "We must consider our members as well," he said.

The Shops act, 1950, precludes Sunday trading in most commodities apart from medicines, tobacco, newspapers, and fresh food other than meat.

The union policy document insists that there is at present no evidence, "particularly in a period of great recession and high unemployment", justifying an extension in Sunday trading beyond that allowed in the Act. It adds: "There is certainly no desire or need for a seven day retail free-for-all."

Business optimism is improving, survey says

By Our Labour Editor

Eight out of 10 trade union officials think industrial relations will worsen over the next year, but a survey of 31 per cent of managers believes that the general economic climate will improve, according to a survey which claims to discern a dramatic improvement in business optimism.

The survey is based on 297 replies to a questionnaire sent out after last month's Budget by Eric Parlooe Industrial Communications (EPIC), reports today that 80 per cent of managers and 29 per cent of trade unionists expect the economic climate to improve in the next 12 months.

"This greatly improved optimism on the economy consistently showed through on other questions. Expectations on improving productivity showed an overall jump of 31 per cent to 71 per cent since 1981. Management confidence in improved productivity for 1982 doubled to 67 per cent."

The black spot, however, is industrial relations. Nearly half of the sample thought that industrial disputes will remain at the same level, and 79 per cent of trade union respondents predict that the industrial relations climate will worsen.

The survey detects a "strong suggestion" of important, long-term changes in management and union attitudes. "Trade unionist appear more willing than managers to acknowledge this - 77 per cent believe the strength of the unions has weakened over the past five years, 47 per cent believe the recession has brought about a long-term change in attitudes towards management; 62 per cent believe that managements have changed their attitudes towards trade unions."

In its analysis of the returns, however, EPIC does not highlight the figure of 79 per cent of trade union respondents who believe that industrial relations will get worse, a rise of seven points on the last similar survey.

An interesting statistic for Mr Norman Tebbit, the Secretary of State for Employment, is the verdict of the survey on his Employment Bill. On the management side, 51 per cent believe it will have "little or no effect on industrial relations over the next three years", while only 20 per cent of trade unionists believe it would have an impact.

Perhaps more surprisingly, almost a third (32 per cent) of trade unionist believe industrial relations would be improved by the introduction of a formal incomes policy, while only 24 per cent of managers share that view.

Girl pianist is musician of year

Miss Anna Markland, an 18-year-old pianist, became the BBC Young Musician of the Year at the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, on Saturday (Chris Cheatham writes). Miss Markland, a pianist from Cobham, Surrey (St Paul's School for Girls, Hammersmith), and Jeanette Murphy, aged 15, from Liverpool, (Chetham's School of Music), Manchester, won a prize of £500, presented to her by Sir Alexander Gibson, chairman of the judges. Her ambition is to be a concert pianist but she also wants to teach.

where she is head girl. The other finalists were Paul Galbraith, aged 18, from Edinburgh, a guitarist from Chetham's School; Karen Jones, aged 16, a flautist from Cobham, Surrey (St Paul's School for Girls, Hammersmith); and Jeanette Murphy, aged 15, from Liverpool, (Chetham's School of Music), Manchester, who won a prize of £500, presented to her by Sir Alexander Gibson, chairman of the judges. Her ambition is to be a concert pianist but she also wants to teach.

Issues the voters must decide

By David Walker
Local Government Correspondent

Cynics, and psephologists, say that what is least important in local elections are the issues, the policy statements, platforms and manifestos of the respective parties.

Perhaps that is just as well, for election manifestos are not the most elevated category of political literature. They are full of general commitment. "Conservatives care for you", the Tory manifesto says in the Prime Minister's home territory of Barnet. "Caring about people... caring about costs", an SDP poster declares.

They make innumerable promises. "People will be appointed as neighbourhood officers who are in tune with the philosophy of the council", Labour's plan for Wandsworth says. "Under Liberal control, the time-wasting and costly jungle of committees and subcommittees will be swept away and a new, more streamlined system introduced", the Liberal manifesto for Manchester proclaims.

Yet beneath the hyperbole, the manifestos and agendas for action do give electors an inkling of what the parties stand for. Or what they stand against. In many areas the main parties are running against something, and their programmes strike a negative note.

As a new party, the SDP has most to be negative about. In a recent joint statement the Alliance for the south London boroughs of Greenwich, Lambeth, Lewisham, Southwark and

LOCAL ELECTIONS

Wandsworth complained: "The existing councils have been using local government for ideological experiments, dishing out an unpalatable diet of dogmatism, mismanagement and bureaucracy, rather than tackling the increasingly intractable problems of inner-city decay and social deprivation with which south London is faced".

In all the metropolitan areas, the Alliance and the Conservatives are taking a critical line about the upper tier of local government, blaming the metropolitan counties and the Greater London Council for high rates.

The Tory manifesto of one of the Westminster wards says the burden of the domestic ratepayer is the fault of socialists at the GLC and the Inner London Education Authority. "Extravagance by the GLC and ILGA is not effectively controlled by the present system. We support reforms of the rating system and local government to keep it responsive to genuine local needs".

Liberals in some areas are highly critical of council staff blaming them for failures of policy and excessive spending. Manchester Liberals say they intend to bring the bureaucrats face to face with the people by establishing "council shops" where citizens can hear officials.

The Conservatives' central themes are spending and the rates, although that song is muted in Tory-controlled London where the rates have recently risen. Manchester Tories have promised to cut the rates if they are elected. Where Conservatives are challenging Labour for power, council house sales and private refuse collection are important. In Birmingham, Mr Neville Bosworth, the party's leader, says big savings would follow collection but also the management of housing, school meals, swimming baths, architects' work and park maintenance.

Labour's agenda can be summarized as more and better, and lays heavy emphasis on the necessity of electing a Labour government to expand public spending in all areas.

The SDP's policy statements focus on a better financial and administrative control of councils, through "performance review committees". A common SDP-Liberal promise is to keep increases in both rates and local authority rents in line with inflation.

Alliance documents lay more emphasis on environmental matters. On housing, the SDP line is to obey the law allowing tenants the right to buy, but with serious misgivings about the policy.

The Alliance shares with Labour an attraction to a new municipal vogue word, decentralization. That involves putting housing and social services officials closer to the people, for example in offices on housing estates. Few manifestos say whether that policy would close town halls.

LOCAL ELECTIONS

Wandsworth complained: "The existing councils have been using local government for ideological experiments, dishing out an unpalatable diet of dogmatism, mismanagement and bureaucracy, rather than tackling the increasingly intractable problems of inner-city decay and social deprivation with which south London is faced".

In all the metropolitan areas, the Alliance and the Conservatives are taking a critical line about the upper tier of local government, blaming the metropolitan counties and the Greater London Council for high rates.

The Tory manifesto of one of the Westminster wards says the burden of the domestic ratepayer is the fault of socialists at the GLC and the Inner London Education Authority. "Extravagance by the GLC and ILGA is not effectively controlled by the present system. We support reforms of the rating system and local government to keep it responsive to genuine local needs".

Liberals in some areas are highly critical of council staff blaming them for failures of policy and excessive spending. Manchester Liberals say they intend to bring the bureaucrats face to face with the people by establishing "council shops" where citizens can hear officials.

The Conservatives' central themes are spending and the rates, although that song is muted in Tory-controlled London where the rates have recently risen. Manchester Tories have promised to cut the rates if they are elected. Where Conservatives are challenging Labour for power, council house sales and private refuse collection are important. In Birmingham, Mr Neville Bosworth, the party's leader, says big savings would follow collection but also the management of housing, school meals, swimming baths, architects' work and park maintenance.

Labour's agenda can be summarized as more and better, and lays heavy emphasis on the necessity of electing a Labour government to expand public spending in all areas.

The SDP's policy statements focus on a better financial and administrative control of councils, through "performance review committees". A common SDP-Liberal promise is to keep increases in both rates and local authority rents in line with inflation.

Alliance documents lay more emphasis on environmental matters. On housing, the SDP line is to obey the law allowing tenants the right to buy, but with serious misgivings about the policy.

The Alliance shares with Labour an attraction to a new municipal vogue word, decentralization. That involves putting housing and social services officials closer to the people, for example in offices on housing estates. Few manifestos say whether that policy would close town halls.

UK 'losing abroad' in genetic research

By Pearce Wright
Science Editor

Discoveries in the rapidly developing field of genetic engineering and biotechnology made in university laboratories in Britain and funded by the Government through grants from the research councils, are being exploited by foreign companies to the exclusion of British companies. Concern is expressed in written evidence to an inquiry by the Commons committee on education, science, and the arts.

It comes in a memorandum from the Medical Research Council. It says relationships of British academics with venture capital companies have important implications for the studies paid for by the three main research councils involved in genetic engineering and biotechnology. The other two are the Agricultural Research Council, and the Science and Engineering Research Council.

The Medical Research Council memorandum says some university scientists obtain council support for the more basic aspects of their research, and then seek foreign venture capital for those aspects of their work likely to have commercial benefits, thus depriving British companies of the financial gain arising from achievements which would not have been possible without government-funded "underpinning research".

There is also anxiety about the loss abroad of young graduates trained in Britain, and the experienced scientists who provide the training, who are "bought up" by American and European companies. The Medical Research Council says that it is necessary to set the level of Britain's training programme on an assumption that there will be substantial wage overseas, and it is necessary also for young and experienced scientists to be properly supported in Britain.

Everything possible should be done to encourage workers who have spent time in industry abroad to return to academic posts in this country, the Medical Research Council says.

In a separate memorandum, the Agricultural Research Council says that the opportunity for big improvements in agriculture, through the application of advances in genetic engineering, will be lost unless there are changes in the traditional teaching and research practices in universities.

Research to improve plants is receiving special attention because of the scale of the potential benefits from applying recent discoveries in molecular biology to create disease-resistant strains and higher yielding crops.

Other high priority research includes the creation of new animal vaccines, the genetic manipulation of animals to improve the quality of the stock, and the development of novel agricultural systems. The last category embraces schemes for growing simple organisms for growing plant cells in large vats.

The agricultural research programme is built on existing expertise, research teams in universities and the council's own institutes. But progress in genetic manipulation of plants is hampered by a dearth of good plant biologists who are also expert in molecular biology.

The medical research Council strives to hold the balance between a continued strength in basic research and exploiting discoveries with potential applications to the National Health Service and industry. The main concern is that the pressure to drive short-term commercial development does not cut off the flow of innovations by diverting money and skills from fundamental research.

The medical research Council strives to hold the balance between a continued strength in basic research and exploiting discoveries with potential applications to the National Health Service and industry. The main concern is that the pressure to drive short-term commercial development does not cut off the flow of innovations by diverting money and skills from fundamental research.

Benn headline 'inaccurate'

A Daily Express headline describing Mr Wedgwood Benn as a dictator was unjustified, inaccurate, and not supported by the text of the article, it reflected an editor's opinion rather than the substance of a news item. The complaint against the Daily Express was upheld.

The Press Council's adjudication was that the headline "Benn the dictator" was unjustified, inaccurate and not supported by the text of the article. It reflected an editor's opinion rather than the substance of a news item. The complaint against the Daily Express was upheld.

The Daily Telegraph was ordered to correct or substantiate a statement in a leading article that was open to more than one interpretation, the Press Council says today.

The council upheld a complaint by Mr F. C. Burrett, of Claygate, Surrey, that having published an assertion that Civil Service department officials lacked the demands of the Civil Service trades, it was in dispute with the Government, the editor failed to correct or substantiate it.

Mr John Warden, political editor, told the council his reports appeared when the issue in the Labour Party was party democracy versus party dictatorship, with the selection of MPs as the touchstone.

Science report

Layman's guide to the high seas

By Tony Samstag

The sea, loosely construed, is inevitably more talked about than understood. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has attempted to put that situation to rights with the publication of a handsome (and relatively cheap) "Atlas of the Seas around the British Isles", only to be greeted with a public indifference that has caused some dismay among the well-meaning scientists at its Lowestoft fisheries laboratory in Suffolk.

The atlas comprises coloured charts, each with its explanatory text and notes on sources, bound loosely (for updating) between hard covers. The maps "bring together for the first time in one book the key facts about the nature of the seas themselves, the size and distribution of the various resources, marine pollution, the dangers which beset those using the sea and the safety measures which are available to combat those dangers", the proud ministry authors write.

Jargon has been kept to an absolute minimum, they note, in the hope that the atlas will find a wide audience among interested laymen as well as specialists, schools and universities.

The series of charts on which the atlas is based dates from 1976 and is basically a spin-off of the ministry's work in collating information about the North Sea. More than 20 of the charts are new, and most of those relate to fisheries of the region; the use of colour is also an advance on the earlier black and white series.

The five sections of the atlas cover the distortions caused by the sea's projection, which is used throughout; the physical, chemical and biological characteristics of the sea; fisheries; "other uses of the sea", such as oil and gas production fields and pollution sources; and marine safety, from light-houses to shipping forecasts.

Atlas of the Seas around the British Isles. (Edited by Arthur Lee and John Ramster. MAFS Atlas Office, Lowestoft, Suffolk NR33 0RT. £11.65 (inc. p&h) UK, or £12 to Europe or North America.

Ramblers remember old battles

From Ronald Faux
Kinder Scout

It was a fine weekend for remembering old battles. Bright sunshine warmed the peat bogs of Kinder Scout in the Derbyshire Peak District where 50 years ago, 400 ramblers from Manchester and Sheffield strode out on to "private" moorland to assert a right to walk in the countryside.

They were confronted by gamekeepers and police. In the clash that followed no one was seriously injured but "a jury of gentry" handed out prison sentences totalling 17 months on five young men found guilty of riotous assembly.

There were no aggressive gamekeepers on the moor this weekend when a large crowd of ramblers met at Hayfield beneath Kinder Scout and marched out on to the moors to link up with a contingent from Sheffield to celebrate the event. It was an impressive turnout on Saturday and yesterday a question and answer session was arranged to air the subject of access to the countryside.

Paper toasts first year

By Alan Hamilton

Britain's youngest Sunday newspaper, the Glasgow Sunday Standard, celebrated its first year of publication yesterday with a party at the home of its editor, Mr Charles Wilson, and a moderately encouraging circulation of 127,043 copies, rising slowly.

Although the paper still falls well short of the 175,000 target set for it at the time of its launch last April, its publishers, Outramps, the Glasgow Herald, who on Sundays had to turn to an English quality paper with scant Scottish news, or to one of the two home-produced Sunday tabloids.

Mr Wilson said yesterday that there was still a large untapped market for the Sunday Standard.

Standard was made possible when Outramps, publishers of the Glasgow Herald and Evening Times, took over the plant at Albion Street, Glasgow, abandoned by Express Newspapers when they withdrew from Scotland, and invested £13,000,000 in new printing technology. The paper was aimed at the 220,000 readers of Scotland's two quality dailies, The Scotsman and the Glasgow Herald, who on Sundays had to turn to an English quality paper with scant Scottish news, or to one of the two home-produced Sunday tabloids.

Mr Wilson said yesterday that there was still a large untapped market for the Sunday Standard.

Labour call for circus animal ban

By Anthony Bevins Political Correspondent

A complete ban on traditional circus animal entertainment is being proposed as part of a Labour Party charter for animal protection.

A study paper which is being considered for inclusion in Labour's statement of political principle on all issues of policy, says: "A party which cares for people and their rights must also care for animals and their protection."

"Labour reaffirms its moral and ethical view that all animals, whether in the wild, domesticated, or farmed for food, should be treated with dignity and respect in strict accordance with their behavioral and ethical needs; for we are partners in this planet with animals, not their masters."

The document also reaffirms a previous condemnation of "extreme livestock systems", demanding "that an animal should have sufficient freedom of movement to be able, without difficulty, to turn around, groom itself, get up, down and stretch its limbs."

But it also delivers a number of new policy pronouncements including a proposed ban on "extreme systems", such as battery cages, veal calf crates and sow stalls.

refers to circus entertainment. The paper says simply: "The use of performing wild animals in circuses and other public places of entertainment will be made illegal."

By contrast, the policy makers appear to have been forced into a compromise on the issue of blood sports.

The document states: "Public opinion polls show that most people favour the banning of blood sports such as live hare coursing and hunting with hounds of other, stage, horses and foxes. All forms of blood sports will be made illegal."

However, it adds: "Shooting and angling will be exempted."

Science report

Layman's guide to the high seas

By Tony Samways
The sea, loosely defined, is everything that is not land. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has attempted to put the publication of a book on the high seas (and relatively close to the British Isles) into a more systematic and less haphazard form. The book, which is a collection of essays by various authors, is intended to provide a guide to the high seas for the layman. It covers a wide range of topics, including the law of the sea, the environment, and the economics of the sea. The book is written in a clear and concise style, and is suitable for anyone with an interest in the sea.

Borstals must go, pressure group argues

By Peter Evans, Home Affairs Correspondent

Britain imprisons more of its young people than any other Western European country, according to a report published today. The London Intermediate Treatment Association, a pressure group on behalf of young people in trouble in London, says official figures show that the number of young people sent to borstals and detention centres has risen fivefold in the past 15 years, but only a fifth of the increase is related directly to increased offending. The rest is the result of the growing use of custodial sentences for almost all offences. The report says that 80 per cent of juveniles now in custody should not be there. Penal institutions for juveniles are attracting a younger, less criminal and violent population, but the report says more young people are re-offending after release. Intermediate treatment was introduced as an alternative to juvenile penal institutions as a result of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969. But its expansion and other community work has done nothing to reduce the juvenile population in traditional custodial institutions. The report says that only with the abolition of institutions like borstals and detention centres will alternative community effort for young offenders become effective. Black people are more likely than whites to make confessions to the police, according to two Birmingham University law lecturers (Lucy Hodges writes). Mr Michael McConville and Mr John Baldwin analysed 479 London crown court cases and found that 60 per cent of black defendants made confessions compared with 49 per cent of the whites. In a sample of 2,500 cases in Birmingham they found that 58 per cent of West Indian defendants confessed to crimes compared with 47 per cent of whites. In both cities only about a fifth of all West Indians entered court without having made or having attributed to them a confession or other damaging statement. The research, which was based on a re-analysis of data culled in 1975-76 in Birmingham and in 1979 in London, was specially prepared for the London Weekend Television programme Skin broadcast yesterday, and has been passed to The Times. The lecturers said the disparity between black defendants and white defendants lay partly in the fact that the blacks were younger than the whites. They, therefore, compared black people with white people in the same group. In London, 52 per cent of whites aged under 21 confessed compared with 69 per cent of West Indians in the same age group. "It is clear that young West Indians are more likely to confess than the young of other racial groups", the researchers say. They add that although the existence of the confessions virtually guarantees a conviction, few of the prosecution cases would have been fatally weakened without one. This applied particularly to black defendants. The Skin programme concluded that the police use of confessions is not only damaging police-black relations but possibly threatening the administration of justice. Mr Tim Daly, a London Weekend reporter, said: "Many people are convinced that black suspects are singled out for particularly harsh treatment during questioning. This, they say, can result in false confessions or statements being made; which in turn explains the current state of retractions in court." The case of David Holder, who was charged with robbery of a jewelry shop in Fleet Street during the Deptford fire march was described. After two interviews and two hours in police cells he confessed to a crime he did not commit. But when his case came up at the Central Criminal Court in February he retracted his statement, two crucial witnesses appeared on his behalf and he was acquitted. Mr Paul Boateng, chairman of the Greater London Council's police committee, was quoted as saying: "You are much more likely to get a confession or a statement given under duress by a black person than by a white because both the fear and the actuality of violence exist to a far greater extent." Abolitionism, report of the London Intermediate Treatment Association No 2, available from LITA, 43 Butler Rd, Harrow, Middlesex, HA1 4DS. 75p plus 25p post and packing.

Animal passions: anti-vivisectionist demonstrators clashing with police on Saturday at the Porton Down germ and chemical warfare laboratories near Salisbury, Wiltshire, where 17,000 animals were allegedly used in live experiments last year. Twenty-four arrests were made. About 5,000 people took part in the protest.

Fight for region's EEC cash aid

From Ronald Kershaw, Barnsley

Mr Roy Mason, Labour MP for Barnsley, has secured assurances from three ministries that they will resist European Commission proposals to make Yorkshire and Humberside ineligible for European Regional Development Fund aid. Mr Mason was told of the proposals by the Strategic Conference of County Councils in Yorkshire and Humberside which said the region's fate was being decided on out-of-date figures. He said the commission intended to measure the economic underdevelopment of a region using an index figure which took into account the region's income and its long-term unemployment. Mr Mason said it appeared that a region qualified for aid from the fund if it had an index of 75 or less. The strategic conference said the commission had used 1977 data to arrive at an index of 91 which disqualified Yorkshire and Humberside for aid. The strategic conference had calculated that using last year's figures the area's index would be 71.5. In a letter to Mr Mason, promising to resist the changes, the Foreign Office described the commission's proposals as most unwelcome. The letter said outdated figures had been used because more recent figures from other regions were not available, so Yorkshire and Humberside's present relative position in the community could not be determined. In the Department of Industry letter, Mr Norman Lamont, the Minister of State, wrote: "We intend to resist the proposals to exclude any of our assisted areas from eligibility for aid from the quota section of the fund." Mr Norman Tebbit, the Secretary of State for Employment, wrote: "We must try to get as much as we can from the fund and, if possible, avoid any detriment."

TV accused over school vandalism

By Kenneth Gosling and Julian Haviland

The BBC television programme Grange Hill is partly to blame for school vandalism, Professor Arthur Pollard, Professor of English at Hull University, told an educational conference in London yesterday. He told the National Council for Educational Standards that the series "had a lot to answer for" and said schools should get back to insisting on "unfashionable" concepts like duty, obedience and discipline from children. He added that punishment and not remedial treatment was the way to deal with young law-breakers. Mr Edward Barnes, head of BBC television children's programmes, later defended Grange Hill. He said the series showed that stealing, bullying and vandalism were cowardly and wrong and eventually led to punishment. Mr Barnes said that Grange Hill, which is not being screened at the moment but is due to return in the autumn, reflected life in comprehensive schools. Schools did not ape things going on at Grange Hill. "Grange Hill is carefully considered entertainment for children which contains a number of story lines with moral conclusions", he said. Children discussing an episode would be able to see the consequences of thoughtless and cruel behaviour. At the same conference, Mr Rhodes Boyson, Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Education and Science, suggested that compulsory comprehensive education was to blame for secondary schools' failure to maintain the rapid improvement in examination results in the 1950s and 1960s. In those 10 years the percentage of pupils aged 18 obtaining two or three GCE A-levels doubled, and a government paper estimated that the next 10 to 15 years would show such an improvement that by 1981 171,000 students a year obtain two or three A-levels. But the number of 18-year-olds gaining A-levels last year was more than a third fewer than the estimate. Mr Boyson said that in some areas the result of comprehensive reorganization seemed to have been mediocrity for all rather than high achievement for all.

Off the Road to the Isles
Taking the entrancing detour to Glen Uig

By Jonathan Wills

The trouble with the Road to the Isles is that most people follow it right through to the Skye ferry at Mallaig. They miss a great deal, notably Glen Uig, just eight miles off the road. The word "scenic" loses its meaning when you get to Glen Uig. It takes some time to realize why the tiny seashore hamlet is so entrancing, everything is in miniature, like a Chinese watercolour landscape: hammocky hills straggle with natural woods, blanket-sized fields squeeze between glacial boulders, and there is a lobster-infested, corrugated coastline that must have been the despair of the early ordnance surveyors. Shortage of people is Glen Uig's big problem. The local primary school closed long ago, and the children have to be taken by bus every day. The common Highland complaint is heard: too many holiday cottages and not enough work for local people. Old Angus McIsaac sits by the fireside in his warm croft at Smeatary, dances a baby grand-daughter on his knee, and recalls the day when it was a different, if poorer, place. There were hearts in the now derelict houses over the hill; folk cut their own peats for fuel; there were several fishing boats, many men went to the Merchant Navy, and the hill was fully stocked with sheep. Cattle, too, and plenty of them. Angus is giving up his cows soon, and not just because of the bad day with the bull. He wants to enjoy his retirement and cattle tie you to the croft. The story of the bad bull has now entered the folklore of Glen Uig. The Department of agriculture runs an excellent scheme, and everything usually goes to plan. The bull arrives in the cattle float from Inverness and proceeds to do its duty by the local cows. This one was different. That was obvious as soon as he came down the ramp and butted Angus in the rump. "Put me right through the fence outside the pub, he did. I was all bruised." Fifteen hundredweight of furious Shorthorn was then tethered to a steel post that they had been trying to pull out of the rock with a tractor. "Tore it up, just like that. We has to send him back. Poor beast, it was his first time, but he will be sausages now." Back at the small hotel by the beach, the cassette machine is powered by a diesel generator. The main supply is not coming until later this year. The tapes are of "Ossian" and "The Boys of the Lough." No Muzak here. Britain is likely to abandon one of the most comprehensive consumer protection laws of recent years because of evidence from grocers that it will not be applied fairly elsewhere in the EEC. The new law, embodied in the Food Labelling Regulations 1980, was agreed after almost 10 years of bargaining in London and Brussels. It was intended to take effect later this year to close many loopholes and to outlaw misleading claims about ingredients and health-giving properties of foods. It was also meant to increase the number of packed groceries on which processors had to declare ingredients, and the number of foods which had to carry the date by which they should be eaten. Many factories are already complying with the new rules so European ingredient names are appearing on British labels while dates are being stamped on "long-life" products which never carried them before. Grocers have told the Government there is evidence that the rules will not be applied in some EEC countries, so that they could gain an unfair cost advantage over their British competitors. Mr Peter Walker, Minister of Agriculture, has asked in a letter to the European Commission for assurances that the rules will be policed throughout the community. If no assurances are given by the commission, which has virtually no law enforcement staff of its own, the British Government will cancel the law which was passed by Parliament in 1980 with a built-in delay of more than two years to give the food industry time to comply with it.

Consumer laws at risk

By Hugh Clayton

Without one man, the Siberian Crane could be next.

Julian Pettifer meets Dr. George Archibald.
'NATURE WATCH'
Tonight 7pm.

Photograph by permission of the Natural History Museum.

From Peter Nichols, Rome, April 25

The fundamental question now being asked is whether President Pertini's intervention will have imposed on Italian politicians a lasting lesson in being less eager to bring down governments on comparative by minor pretexts rather than attending to the nation's need for more governmental stability.

By the middle of last week, Senator Spadolini looked hopelessly trapped. One of his ministers, Senator Beniamino Andreatta, the Christian Democratic economist in charge of the Treasury, was reported as having referred to a Socialist electoral advance as a step

From Harry Debelius, Madrid, April 25

The presiding officer until the weekend was Lieutenant-General Luis Alvarez who was taken to hospital in Madrid on Saturday suffering from a duodenal ulcer. His duties were assumed automatically by Lieutenant-General Gómez de Salazar as the next highest ranking officer on the panel.

General Gómez de Salazar, aged 69, led Spain's forces in the Western Sahara at the time of the "Green March" by unarmed Moroccans in 1975 and obeyed orders to avoid bloodshed. He later supervised the withdrawal of Spanish troops from the Sahara.

مكتبة الأهل

the 1990s, the number of people in the United States who are 65 years of age or older is projected to increase from 20 million to 30 million, and the number of people 75 years of age or older is projected to increase from 10 million to 15 million (U.S. Census Bureau, 1997).

Alitalia

50

the 1990s, the number of people in the United States who are 65 years of age or older is projected to increase from 20 million to 30 million, and the number of people 75 years of age or older is projected to increase from 10 million to 15 million (U.S. Census Bureau, 1996). The number of people 85 years of age or older is projected to increase from 2 million to 4 million (U.S. Census Bureau, 1996). The number of people 90 years of age or older is projected to increase from 500,000 to 1 million (U.S. Census Bureau, 1996). The number of people 95 years of age or older is projected to increase from 100,000 to 200,000 (U.S. Census Bureau, 1996). The number of people 100 years of age or older is projected to increase from 10,000 to 20,000 (U.S. Census Bureau, 1996).

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are illiterate has increased from 1.2 billion to 1.5 billion. The number of illiterate people in the world is expected to reach 1.7 billion by the year 2015. The number of illiterate people in the world is expected to reach 1.7 billion by the year 2015.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion. The number of people aged 65 and over is expected to increase from 200 million to 400 million. The number of people aged 15 and over is expected to increase from 3.5 billion to 4.5 billion. The number of people aged 15 and over is expected to increase from 3.5 billion to 4.5 billion. The number of people aged 15 and over is expected to increase from 3.5 billion to 4.5 billion.

FALKLANDS CRISIS

Faces of conflict (left to right): Señor Nicanor Costa Méndez, the Argentine Foreign Minister; military cooks receiving weapons training on board HMS Canberra; Royal Marines repatriated by the invaders but now on their way back to the Falklands; Miss Cindy Buxton, one of the two British film-makers still on South Georgia.

Costa Méndez says it is technically war

From Nicholas Ashford, Washington, April 25

Señor Nicanor Costa Méndez, the Argentine Foreign Minister, arrived here today for talks on the Falklands crisis with Mr Alexander Haig, the American Secretary of State, to attend tomorrow's special meeting of the Organization of American States (OAS) which will consider possible measures against Britain under the 1947 Rio Treaty on collective defence.

The British attack on an Argentine submarine and the landing on South Georgia have greatly increased the importance of tomorrow's meeting, which will be attended by representatives of the 21 signatories of the Rio Treaty, including the United States. The Argentines have already made the point that South Georgia falls within the geographic area covered by the treaty.

There was speculation here today that the incidents may persuade Argentina to call for a tough action against Britain, possibly even asking other signatories to provide Argentina with military assistance.

Señor Costa Méndez underlined how seriously he considered the situation when he told reporters on his arrival in New York that Argentina was now technically in a state of war with Britain.

Earlier it had been expected that Señor Costa Méndez would attempt to invoke only Article 6 of the treaty, branding Britain as an aggressor. However, it was now thought possible that Argentina might try to invoke Article 3, which calls for armed assistance from all signatories.

Whatever steps Argentina takes will be opposed by the United States, which is trying to mediate between Britain and Argentina and hopes to defuse the situation before the shooting gets worse.

During last week's meeting of the Organization of American States which decided to convene tomorrow's special session, the United States made it clear that it considered any action under the Rio Treaty inappropriate so long as negotiations continued.

The United States is one of three countries that abstained when the organization voted last Wednesday to hold tomorrow's meeting. It is uncertain whether Argentina can expect to gain the same degree of support as it received last week if it calls for collective action against Britain. Several countries have made it clear that they would scrutinize very carefully any Argentine request for assistance. Some are likely to point to the section in the Rio Treaty which states that signatories should not take any action which runs contrary to the decisions taken by the United Nations.

Argentina is in breach of Security Council Resolution 502 which calls on it to withdraw its forces from the Falklands.

Tomorrow's meeting of the Organization of American States was expected to be the main topic on the agenda at this evening's meeting between Señor Costa Méndez and Mr Haig. Mr Haig was also expected to inform the Argentine Foreign Minister of the outcome of his talks last week with Mr Francis Pym, the Foreign Secretary.

Mr Pym took some American ideas for a settlement with him back to London on Friday night. However, he made it clear to Mr Haig before he departed that these ideas left a great deal to be desired, although they did provide the basis for negotiations to continue.

According to American sources, Mr Haig was left with a clear impression that the British intended to use force within the next few days. However, Mr Pym also made it clear to him that Britain still wanted Mr Haig to continue his diplomatic efforts even after the shooting began.

According to the sources the British told Mr Haig that an outbreak of fighting in the South Atlantic might persuade Argentina to soften its negotiating position and also lead to new moves in the Security Council.

The sources say there are two major obstacles in the negotiations: Argentine insistence on its sovereignty over the islands being guaranteed and Britain's determination to uphold the islanders' right to self-determination.

According to a front page report in The New York Times today, high-ranking American officials have indicated that the United States will back Britain against Argentina if negotiations fail. The support would include America joining an embargo on Argentine goods, but not the use of American forces.

However, Mr John Tower, chairman of the powerful Senate Armed Services Committee, today urged the Reagan Administration to send naval units to support the Royal Navy task force in the South Atlantic.

In a television interview today Sir Nicholas Henderson, the British Ambassador, said he was confident of American backing although he did not say what form that backing would take.

New York: Señor Costa Méndez arrived here expressing hope for a diplomatic solution (UPI reports). He said he had no immediate reports on damage to the attacked Argentine submarine but when asked if the fact that shots were fired would end the effort for a diplomatic settlement, he replied: "There is never an end to diplomacy."

A State Department spokesman said the incident is further confirmation of the gravity of the situation and demonstrated anew the urgency of a diplomatic solution. The United States remains committed to that objective and we will continue our ongoing efforts.

In an interview on board his aircraft before the submarine attack, Señor Méndez said he was hopeful about the Organization of American States meeting. "I believe Washington is going to be a demonstration of Latin American solidarity, and I believe that solidarity is one of the most certain ways to peace," he said, speaking in Spanish.

The statement issued by the Ministry of Defence pointed to the "additional measures" which it threatened more than two weeks ago when announcing a maritime exclusion zone around the Falklands.

The statement said: "In this connection Her Majesty's Government wishes to make clear that any approach on the part of Argentine warships including submarines, naval auxiliaries or military aircraft which could amount to a threat to interfere with the mission of British forces in the South Atlantic will encounter the appropriate response."

Rear Admiral John Woodward, the task force commander, was said to have been taking "appropriate action" in the incident involving the Argentine submarine at Grytviken, although later events suggested that this was part of a far wider plan.

It had been assumed for some time that Admiral Woodward would try to operate an exclusion zone above the maritime exclusion zone, as soon as surface warships, capable of forcing entry, entered Falkland waters.

In the event this has not been created but the task force is operating a defensive "bubble" moving gradually westwards with the ships.

Surveillance of the force would still be possible by Soviet satellites, but these are not overhead all the time. Observation of the "defensive area" will be enforced by the Sea Harrier aircraft on board HMS Hermes and Invincible and the Sea Dart and Sea Slug missiles on the Type 42 and County Class destroyers respectively.

But weather in the area, including mountainous waves, could make Harrier operations impossible because of the effect on the carrier decks. But the fact that the defensive defence area was declared yesterday, some 36 hours after the warning was actually given to Argentina, must reflect Admiral Woodward's confidence in his ability to maintain it.

One question now is whether the force will extend the "defensive area" to cover the air space over the Falklands themselves when the ships with their accompanying aircraft have moved into a position in Falkland waters from which they could maintain such a threat.

"They must be scared to death by now"

'Defensive area' around fleet

By Henry Stanhope, Defence Correspondent

PA RUSH
1 Falklands with helicopters today attacked Argentine submarine near South Georgia, said defence ministry.
-- 1234 25/4 PM MM

PA FLASH
British forces now on South Georgia - Ministry of Defence.

The spark: How the news broke yesterday on the Press Association tape.

Sea King crewman lost in sea

From John Witherow on board HMS Invincible April 25

The death of a crewman on board a Sea King helicopter in the South Atlantic has cast a shadow across the mission of the Royal Navy task force as it steams into increasingly severe weather conditions closer to the Falkland Islands.

It has also highlighted the efficiency and bravery of the men involved in the rescue operation, who for hours hovered only feet above the waves on a pitch-black night of heavy rain and lightning, to winch out the pilot and search for the missing man.

A helicopter from HMS Invincible was first on the scene on Friday night, hovering at less than 50 feet, and using its search and landing lights. It found only wreckage at first but after 20 minutes it discovered a dinghy containing the pilot.

Leading aircraftman Thomas Arnall, aged 24, was the winchman who was lowered into the heavy swell to grab the pilot, who had managed to escape from the sinking helicopter. They took him to HMS Hermes, where the helicopter was based, then returned to continue the search which carried on throughout the night and the next day, and involved several ships and helicopters.

It was the first time that leading aircraftman Arnall had been involved in an air-sea rescue, but he read his notes in a matter-of-fact way, and described the incident as "like a speedway training sortie". He was dropped 20 or 30 yards from the survivor and trailed towards him.

"On the third attempt, the pilot grabbed my wrist, pulling us up together. He was sitting in the life-raft with no helmet. I asked him if he was OK and he said 'yes' and I said 'good man'. He then asked me did I see the tail section. He said he had tried to get inside it. He knew his crewman had been in the back", he said.

Sub-lieutenant Christopher Howarth, aged 28, who piloted the rescue helicopter, with the aid of Prince Andrew, also a sub-lieutenant, added: "We were told to get airborne and home in on the beacon. We searched around until we spotted him in the water. He was about four or five miles away."

"We could see one of the flotation bags from the undercarriage. I don't know why the aircraft had gone down. There was moonlight to help us at all. It was pitch black."

"The pilot had grazed on his face and hand, and he was limping but he was coherent. We asked him how many had been in the aircraft. He said he last saw the crewman just before they impacted and had not seen him since. He had come forward to help the pilot."

Lieutenant Commander Ralph Wykes-Saunders, in charge of HMS Invincible's 820 Squadron, said such accidents had become increasingly rare in the Royal Navy Fleet Air Arm in the past 20 years, although last year two helicopters from the Invincible collided off the Isle of Wight, killing five.

Spy charge: Journalists face trial

From Our Own Correspondent Buenos Aires, April 25

An Argentine federal judge has ruled that three British journalists must face trial on charges of spying.

Judge Carlos Sagastume said he did not think they were habitual spies but, given the situation, it was possible that they had acted from patriotic motives or explicit instructions. Material in their possession could, in the opinion of the military, damage the interests of the state if it were put in the hands of a hostile power.

Mr Simon Winchester of The Sunday Times, Mr Ian Mather of The Observer and Mr Anthony Prime, a photographer for The Observer, were arrested last Tuesday week while sitting in the coffee shop at the airport in Rio Grande, Tierra del Fuego. They had flown in from Ushuaia in the extreme south of the country and were awaiting their aircraft to Buenos Aires.

They were taken in custody to Buenos Aires and interrogated. After a few days they were returned to Ushuaia and last week were questioned by Judge Sagastume in preliminary hearings to decide whether there was a prima facie case against them.

They are now being allowed to receive telephone calls and the authorities seem to be going out of their way to ensure that they are well treated. They are being provided with English language books, and are receiving legal representation. Representatives of both newspapers are in the town.

The Pope's plea: Pray for peace

From John Earle Rome, April 25

Pope John Paul today expressed alarm at the prospect of fighting between Britain and Argentina, and made a call for prayer for a peaceful solution to the Falklands dispute.

In an address to pilgrims in St Peter's Square from the window of the Vatican, he recalled that he had appealed repeatedly in recent days for a peaceful solution.

He asked Catholics throughout the world, and particularly in Argentina and Britain, to join in prayer "that the Lord may inspire the responsible rulers with decision and courage to seek, in this perhaps decisive hour, the paths of understanding, with wisdom and magnanimity, that irreparable good of their peoples and for the tranquillity of the American continent."

Opinion poll: 79% support

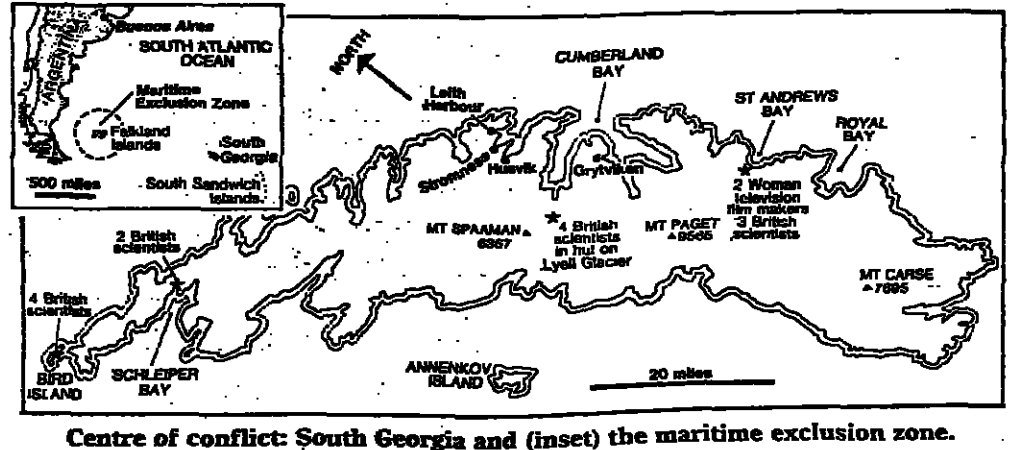

By Our Foreign Staff

The British public continues to support overwhelmingly the Government's policy of negotiating from a position of strength over the Falklands dispute.

According to a public opinion survey carried out by Opinion Research for Independent Television's Weekend World programme, support for the government's Falklands policy was running at 79 per cent last week. Eleven per cent of those interviewed were opposed to the way the Government was handling the crisis and a further 10 per cent were undecided.

Support for putting the lives of British servicemen at risk during the crisis was, however, only lukewarm. A full 52 per cent of the survey believed that servicemen's lives should not be jeopardized, compared with 41 per cent who thought they should. The remaining 7 per cent were undecided.

This second finding must cause concern for Mrs Thatcher and her colleagues, particularly now that the first shots have been fired between Britain and Argentina.

Centre of conflict: South Georgia and (inset) the maritime exclusion zone.

Echo of peaceful days 'Penguin News' avoids a flap

From Christopher Thomas, Buenos Aires

The Penguin News journal of the Falkland Islands, had much more than its usual fare in its last issue. There was also the grievous matter of the road accident.

While the Argentines were mustering their Army the paper reported sadly that a Land-Rover and a Hillman Imp had collided in Port Stanley, inflicting possible irreparable damage to the latter vehicle.

The newspaper, consisting of 15 stencilled and stapled pages is a classic of its kind, reflecting a way of life that has nothing to do with the world beyond. A few copies of issue number 19, the last before the invasion, have just arrived in Buenos Aires and are already collectors' items.

The paper carried extensive reports on the "invasion" of South Georgia by the Argentine scrap metal merchants but as for the prospects of an invasion of the Falklands it admitted humbly that "we still know very little". Seven days after publication the Argentines landed.

But it was better informed on the road accident, an occurrence that is rare indeed in Port Stanley, which involved 12 miles of made-up roads. Those who know the place say it is difficult to find anything to have an accident with, and indeed the Penguin News said that traffic "is fairly peaceful". Happily, it reported, nobody was injured.

The paper also reported the rather remarkable news that 11 Polish seamen had decided to settle in Stanley rather than go home to a dictatorship. "Some of the seamen have been quite daring. One young man shinned down a rope into the customs launch below. Others have simply wandered away from a recreation group ashore for an afternoon."

But alas, an Englishman sent to the town's jail for three months deprived the Poles of their home. Until the Englishman arrived they were sleeping in the prison but they had to move to the annex of St Mary's church.

On a less international note, the paper reported a good turnout for the annual vegetable show and an announced that the Stanley soccer side achieved a "splendid" 5-0 victory over the Royal Marines.

And it revealed the juicy gossip that a school teacher, who was named, had fallen out with the superintendent of Education and got the sack.

And right at the end of the paper, in the editorial column, it said the Argentinians must not be allowed to show over the invasion of South Georgia. "RMS Endeavour, which is at last being provided with a chance to prove her worth, must ensure that the Argentinians at Leith Harbour are deported from the Falklands Dependency."

If issue number 20 of the Penguin News ever appears, it should be an extremely interesting read.

Nott accused of gagging MPs

An MP who is demanding to know why Britain supplied military spares to Argentina as late as March 22, claimed today that he had been forbidden to raise the issue in the House of Commons.

Mr Douglas Hoyle, Labour MP for Warrington, said he had had to resort to the "very much second best" of writing instead to Mr John Nott, the Defence Secretary. He claimed Mr Nott had "blacklisted" Commons questions on the subject.

Mr Hoyle added that a query had been raised by Ministry of Defence officials when the priority order for spares for Argentina was placed but that it was ignored.

Sanctions will be slow to bite

By Rupert Morris

Trade sanctions against Argentina imposed by Britain and the European Community are causing long-term anxiety for British companies but are not expected to have any significant effect for several weeks.

The problem for Argentina could be much more serious as more than a quarter of its exports come to Europe. West Germany is the biggest European importer, taking 6.9 per cent of Argentina's goods, with The Netherlands taking 6.3 per cent and Italy 5.6 per cent. Italian shoes and leather goods would suffer from any prolongation of the ban, as most hides come from Argentina.

Britain (2.9 per cent) and France (2.7) are the only other countries to import significant quantities from Argentina.

The Blue Star Line, a subsidiary of the Vestey Organization, which normally carries 1,300 tons of meat from South America to Britain every three weeks, has been able to make up Argentina's usual quota by taking more from Brazil. Blue Star is doubtful, however, whether Brazil can continue to make up the deficiency.

Southbound cargoes to Argentina have declined over the past few years. Britain's exports to Argentina are so diverse, and so insignificant in industry terms that it is hard to quantify the effect of the Argentina ban as yet. The main exports are industrial machinery, but at less than £50m a year these do not involve any important projects.

The potentially far more significant EEC ban is of primarily symbolic value for the moment. Its practical effect will be clearer on May 17, when the EEC will review its position in the light of developments. All member states have ratified the EEC's decision.

Customs and excise departments are understood to be monitoring the ban and have not yet impounded any goods for breaches.

The Times Profile: the Duke of Edinburgh, by Philip Howard

Duke of all trades, master of most

On philosopher kings

'It is a naive appreciation of human nature to imagine that such processed paragons can be invested with the necessary powers and not be tempted to take advantage'

The Palace is a stage, and all the royals merely players, doing a good job representing the dignified and formal parts of the British Constitution. And of them all the Duke of Edinburgh plays the most parts: sailor, pilot, wild life expert, spokesman for the conservation industry and at the same time an extraordinary liquidator of pheasants, Admiral, Air Marshal, Colonel in Chief, youth leader, businessman, manqué, a brisk moralist of the after-dinner speech, national pepper-up, handsome escort to an extraordinary procession of Presidents' wives. A man so various that he seems to be not one, but all the royalty game's epitome.

Next month he takes on a new role as intellectual by publishing a book of his beliefs about life and truth, and all that. It marks a transition. Suddenly we realise that the Duke we have known and loved and grown up with is in danger of becoming an elder statesman.

The familiar image of the tall man in a naval uniform, always a pace behind the Queen with his hands clasped behind his back at ease, alert, smiling, and ready to chat up anything that moves, is fading out of date. His sons are as tall as he is, and more glamorous to the glamour-struck generation. He is a father-in-law, and increasingly a grandfather.

Exit the sailor prince; enter the philosopher king of the tribe. It is an axiom of monarchy that the magic of a monarch becomes more potent as she or he grows older, because fewer and fewer of her subjects have known anybody else as their mascot head of state. The same process may well work with consort.

The old image of the Duke as dashing and glamorous partner to our Queen was formed in those days of star-eyed royalty-workship just after the war. I sat on the same platform as him four

On Christ

'He might be described as an underprivileged, colonial, working-class victim of political and religious persecution' days before his engagement was announced. The occasion was the tercentenary of Cheam School, the oldest prep school in the country, or so we Old Cheesemites boast. I was head boy. Lieutenant Philip Mountbatten was our most famous old boy and star attraction for snobbish prospective parents. I cannot remember a word that he said (I was too frightened about my own speech). But I remember that it was confident, ringing stuff, and that we greeted it with rapturous applause and one of the earliest examples of a standing ovation. Well, we would, wouldn't we? He had just asked our famous headmaster, H. M. S. Taylor, for a whole day's holiday for us out of the hell-hole.

Here is a conventional view of the old-style Duke from the shocking pink pen of the step-grandmother-in-law of the Prince of Wales: "A very handsome, attractive and charming young man... He has been a rock of strength in her very arduous and exacting life. His sense of humour has also smoothed a path which is often thorny despite her brilliant intelligence and astounding knowledge of world affairs."

Here is a colder view from Willie Hamilton: "Perhaps with his great (and carefully calculated) talent for putting his foot in it, we might consider Prince Philip to be the most eloquent, literate and classless member of the Royal Family. Certainly his 'bluntness' has made him the white hope of the British middle classes: a man who 'speaks his mind' who has 'the common touch'."

And here is a more perceptive view from a more intelligent writer than either of them, Andrew Duncan: "He has the charisma of a Prince: tough-looking face, hard mouth, penetrating eyes, a voice pitched between arrogance and a certain peevish

On progress

'In every age the great human civilisations have depended far more upon emotional inspiration than upon the standard of plumbing' querulousness, a heart-throb to the provinces, wise-cracking his way round the globe, peddling bright hopes and salutary advice. A man attractive to women, envied by men, a bit vicious on the polo field, autocratic, something of a ham actor - and in the end, he lives a good life, but he has to pay for it, and he has never been rich."

None of those views is quite right. You have to be Tacitus to capture a man's character in a couple of sentences. But all three of them convey something of the old-style Duke Mark I. What about the new-style Duke, Mark II? On the cover of his book - A Question of Balance (to be published on May 24 by Michael Russell, £5.95), the old eagle-eyed, eagle-beaked face looks out at us challengingly (a bit arrogantly, a bit humorously) from the dust jacket, but he really is going bald. Inside are collected addresses he has given at various times on general subjects of life, and society, and religion.

Running through them is the Duke's belief in the importance of the individual, his dislike of state and corporate control, and his faith in the moral standards he was taught as a boy: the morality of cold baths, Christianity, cricket, and Kurt Hahn. He cannot decide whether his passion for individualism is due to what he learned about Christianity or to what he learned about Christianity. But for him they go together like bacon and eggs or op and rock. He is a man who believes in Christianity and individualism are linked together, and from what I see going on in the world around me, I am very much inclined to believe that religious conviction is the strongest and probably the only factor in sustaining the

On education

'Learning against a background of no experience means that there is no way of assessing the importance or the relevance of what is being taught' dignity and integrity of the individual.

Armed with this dialectic he takes on the dragons of the modern world. There is a hearty though superficial dual demolition of Marxism. It runs roughly, compressing it a bit. Marx's weakness was a hopelessly unrealistic understanding of human nature. His obsession with science and scientific socialism, with materialism and dialectics, and with academic research, blinded him to the power, variety and irrational nature of human emotions and talents, and to the fact that such qualities of human nature are equally distributed among all people regardless of class or intellect.

Christ only tried to influence men in their behaviour towards each other through their belief in God and promised paradise in the next world, whereas the middle-class intellectual sought absolute political power and expected to achieve paradise in this world. The Duke is on Christ's side. He goes on that it is one of the unfortunate rules of human nature that whenever people get on to a good thing, they promptly overdo it. "Selfishness" and thoughtlessness are more to be blamed than malice. The classic flaw in Marx's ideas was that scientific answers could be applied to social issues.

Another point he makes: the idea of taking away property from other people has much more appeal if one has none of one's own. One of the products of our confiscatory taxation is the rapid and extensive development of fringe benefits, tied to particular jobs in the same way as the old agricultural tied cottage. The beneficiaries feel that they have gained something, but they seem to be unaware that they are in danger of becoming virtual slaves of their employers or of the State. After all, slaves live

On Karl Marx

'One of Marx's worst miscalculations was to forget that if you threaten people with death or the expropriation of their property they are unlikely to give you their loyal support' entirely on fringe benefits. Marxists personify certain classes as evil, and use words as subjectively as Humpty Dumpty. Now for the first time since mankind and Marx took off on their materialist spree, there are signs that human, ethical, and moral values are coming to be seen as more important than the most glittering products of engineering genius.

"There will doubtless always be a proportion who will enjoy reverting to standards of behaviour which even our remote ancestors would have found idiotic and revolting, but surely it is not too much to hope that more and more people will come to realize that it is men and their behaviour, their emotions, their conflicts, and their ideals which govern the future."

We have rated computers above compassion, machines above mercy, and telecommunications above human relations. And so, the Duke has a taste for alliteration. There are apt citations of sages from Aristotle to Adam Smith and de Tocqueville. Since he has exposed himself to scholarly quibbling, I doubt whether he was wise to pick Hadrian's Wall as an example of a wall built to keep foreigners out, and the Berlin Wall as the first wall in history designed to keep its citizens in. Quite a respectable body of scholarship believes that Hadrian's Wall as the northern limit of the Empire was built to do just that.

The Duke goes on to consider truth, and stays for the answer that peace, love, and beauty can be obtained by falsehood. He flashes his old dislike of a man without a degree, of university education being considered the highest sort of education. He is against Keynes, in favour of large doses of organized work as rehabilitation for young offenders, and married about the population explosion. "The trouble is that there are so many females of breeding age who are either ignorant or irresponsible, or sometimes both ignorant and irresponsible, and so many men to encourage them to be irresponsible."

On sex education

'It is rather a sad commentary that of all the functions of our bodies, the only one that schools feel worth bothering about is the reproductive system'

What are we to make of all this? One could say that we are indeed lucky in our Elder Statesman Duke. It is admirable and rather touching that he takes so much trouble and thinks so hard about issues addressed to people who really do not mind what he says so long as he dignifies them with his presence. There is considerable bluff common sense and decency in here.

One could say that as an intellectual exercise it is like a dog's walking on its hind legs. It is not worth doing; but you are surprised to find it done at all by

On nationalisation

'Substituting Parliament for shareholders does make it more difficult for Parliament to treat all sectors and sections of the State with complete impartiality' a member of the royal family. Reading it straight through is rather like swimming in chilled mud: bracing, but exhausting. There are rather too many of H.M.S.T.'s thunderous and harsh old simplicities still echoing from Sunday sermons a generation ago.

One could say that if there were to be a right-wing coup in this country, the Queen and the Prince of Wales would be sent as our native equivalent of Siberia, and that the Duke of Edinburgh and Prince Andrew would be used as figureheads by our Colonels. To say that would be in bad taste, as well as a joke, as well as perhaps High Treason.

The middle-aged view is that none of those explanations is the whole truth, but that there is a bit of truth in all of them. But then, we are all growing middle-aged, not just our Elder Statesman.

Cheam School 1947: Philip Howard, head boy (left), Lieutenant Philip Mountbatten, Hugh Farmer and Lord Sherwood

Entertainments Guide

ENTERTAINMENTS

See most recent cards accepted for telephone bookings or at the box office outside London Metropolitan Area.

OPERA & BALLET

COVENT GARDEN 8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

CONCERTS

BARBICAN HALL, Barbican Centre, London EC2A 4PU. Tel: 01-477 9901. Admission: £2.50-15.00. Box Office: 01-477 9901. Tickets: £2.50-15.00. Box Office: 01-477 9901.

THEATRES

CREDIT THEATRE INSTANT BOOKING SERVICE... NOT LINES

ALBERT

Children of a Lesser God. 8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

OLIVER

Children of a Lesser God. 8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

THE ROYAL BALLET

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

THE ROYAL OPERA

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

CAMBRIDGE

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

FRIDAY

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

THE ROYAL THEATRE

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

THE ROYAL THEATRE

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

PRINCE OF WALES THEATRE

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

THE ROYAL THEATRE

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

THE ROYAL THEATRE

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

THE ROYAL THEATRE

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

STRAFORD-UPON-AVON

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

THE ROYAL THEATRE

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

THE ROYAL THEATRE

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

THE ROYAL THEATRE

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

EXHIBITIONS

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

ART GALLERIES

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

THE ROYAL THEATRE

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

THE ROYAL THEATRE

8.00 10.00 12.00 14.00 16.00 18.00 20.00 22.00 24.00 26.00 28.00 30.00 32.00 34.00 36.00 38.00 40.00 42.00 44.00 46.00 48.00 50.00 52.00 54.00 56.00 58.00 60.00 62.00 64.00 66.00 68.00 70.00 72.00 74.00 76.00 78.00 80.00 82.00 84.00 86.00 88.00 90.00 92.00 94.00 96.00 98.00 100.00

مكتبة الامم المتحدة

How to do a deal without a sell-out

Until three weeks ago British public and political interest in the 149-year-old dispute over the Falklands had been transient. A real understanding of the issues, the nature and character of the islands, had been confined to those relatively few people who had made the 8,000-mile journey. Now — a possibility heightened by the submarine incident yesterday — British servicemen, islanders and Argentines could be locked in combat over territory which few really know and understand.

There is now a widely held view that the Foreign Office has always wanted to get rid of the islands. On the contrary, the Foreign Office has always held a profound and genuine concern for their welfare, though understandably both the Office and its ministers have been bound to consider the wider implications for Britain's international relationships. If there was a "Foreign Office view" it was a gradually increasing pessimism about the island's economic, political and security future.

These assessments and attitudes prompted the initiative in 1975 of sending an economic mission to report on the problems and potential of the islands; the report was to provide the basis for future discussions with the Argentines.

As with so much else in our Falklands/Argentine dealings it was utterly misinterpreted by the Argentines. They saw the appointment of Lord Shackleton, son of the intrepid explorer, as a deliberate challenge.

It was my first taste of a

Falklands' crisis. One never easily forgets sitting in an office receiving regular reports from a ship under shell fire, with a captain turning a blind eye to the shells and steadily sailing back to Port Stanley. Individual acts of bravery and nerve noticeable in the current crisis have their antecedents.

Lord Shackleton reported in July 1976. His recommendations ranged from the multi-million pound proposal to extend the airstrip to details concerning the grasslands trial unit. The report identified the major resources of oil and fish in the area and underlined the potential of oil.

Simultaneously we had been considering the political/sovereignty options, including a condominium and a Hong Kong-style lease. Neither of these was launched. Instead, on February 2, 1977, Tony Crosland announced that "new developments (a reference to the Shackleton report) required a framework of greater political and economic co-operation. Without such a framework the prospect of achieving a prosperous and durable future for the islands is bleak."

I was dispatched to the Islands tragically during the very week that Tony Crosland collapsed and died.

I had not appreciated the true nature and character of the Falkland Islands and their people until my visit. The few hundred islanders who travel regularly to Britain disguise the fact that the vast majority have never been off the islands. Some have not even been to Port Stanley.

Their traditions are British. Their roots are deep in the islands. Their ties with Britain are historic and possibly family, but not physical. I therefore find it deeply distasteful to listen to some of those who, having roundly condemned Mr Tebbitt for urging that we "get on our bike" to find jobs are now advocating the extreme equivalent for the islanders, that they should be transported either to council houses in Britain or distant sheep farms in New Zealand.

As British forces engage an Argentine submarine
Ted Rowlands, who visited the Falklands as a Foreign Office minister in 1977, argues that the invasion might, ironically, work in favour of the islanders.

I found the islanders fearful of the Argentines and suspicious of British ministers. Tragically, recent events have proved those fears and suspicions to be justified. After extensive consultations with councillors and in almost every settlement, woolshed and farmyard, it was agreed that we should open negotiations on our economic and political relations with Argentina, including sovereignty.

The islanders' view was straightforward — "go and find out what you can get for us and report back".

From an early date the negotiations were clouded by distrust and deceit, particularly after our discovery in 1977 of a nonsensical but symbolically significant Argentine gesture in occupying illegally one of the most southerly parts of the South Sandwich Islands — Southern Thule. At first they denied it and then explained it away in terms of a temporary Argentine scientific exploration mission.

The Southern Thule affair undermined much of our confidence in meaningful negotiations. The Argentines were revealed as untrustworthy cheats. The assumption, thereafter, had to be made that even if one carried on negotiating then it was vital to do so from a position of best possible strength. It had to be made absolutely clear to them that any attempt to change the balance of negotiations, altering fundamentally the existing sovereignty position by force, would be met by force. They had to be deterred, and they were until a fortnight last Friday.

Looking back on two years of discussions, fraught and distrustful as they were, I believe we were perhaps groping towards some ideas and solutions which may have relevance for the future. A clear distinction can be made between sovereignty involving people, their homes and communities, and sovereignty over resources. I should not consider it a betrayal or sell-out if a British government sought a solution involving changes in sovereignty over resources in return for the absolute sovereignty over people, their homes, land and communities — a people who have been and wish to remain British in the Falklands.

Sovereignty is not some high sounding concept devised by international lawyers to keep themselves in business. It has a whole series of practical dimensions. Whose currency rules? Who controls internal and external security? Who will represent the islanders in the international community? Does one concede the right of Argentines to enter or leave without immigration procedures? Will they have the right to purchase land? A rumoured land deal involving Mr Jimmy Goldsmith and Argentine financiers was scotched a year or two ago by our clear declaration against any alienation of Falklands' land.

Because of the invasion, things will never be the same for the islanders. Some commentators have concluded that, as a consequence, they will now be forced to accept unpalatable solutions previously rejected. I challenge that.

First, I have always assumed that all our efforts in resisting the islanders' freedom of choice. Secondly, we must not underestimate the immense impact on Argentina's rulers if they are forced to leave under the combined international diplomatic, economic and British military pressure.

Future Argentine leaders will not easily forget the sight of Argentines queuing at the banks to withdraw their pesos, the disruption of their major trading links with Europe, and the prospect of the destruction of their cherished fleet.

Therefore, from the present conflict there may emerge meaningful negotiations and from them a system of shared sovereignty over the resources of the area, combined with Argentine and international recognition of the islanders' true sovereign rights. That must be our objective.

The author is Labour MP for Merthyr Tydfil.
© Times Newspapers Limited, 1982

Could Reagan really rattle the Kremlin?

In the office of one of the President's foreign policy advisers in Washington hangs a black poster advertising a film called Bedtime for Brezhnev. The star, a certain Ronald Reagan, is depicted holding an unshaven and villainous-looking Leonid Brezhnev by the lapels, while the Soviet leader's black-hatted cronies — Fidel Castro and Colonel Gaddafi, no less — grimace helplessly. Mr Reagan — clean-shaven, firm-jawed — is flanked by Vice President George Bush and Henry "Doc" Kissinger, both in white suits. "From out of the West," reads the caption, "they dusted off their guns, and rode out to protect the world they knew and the women they loved."

The "get tough with the Russians" school of diplomacy has in fact taken a few knocks in the 15 months since Mr Reagan was elected, due partly to growing criticism of high defence spending at a time of economic recession, and partly to growing public anxiety over the possibility of nuclear conflict.

There is still a great deal of support for the Administration's view of the global struggle against communism, with the hand of Moscow decried in every conceivable crisis, especially the one over the Falklands.

But there is also pressure — particularly from businessmen and farmers — for a more realistic approach. The idea of a summit meeting between the two superpowers — Mr Reagan is 72, Mr Brezhnev 76 — was first put forward by Moscow, and ignored by Washington, but is now being revived by Mr Reagan.

There may have been a ploy, based on the assumption that the Soviet leader would be too old to make it. But Mr Brezhnev has bounced back, promising a "neutral country" summit in New York in the autumn, and the autumn of the summer as the time.

This leads some to suspect that although Mr Reagan is physically fitter than Mr Brezhnev, the Soviet leader is faster on his feet politically, and despite the fact that he is surrounded by the advantage of Soviet guile, experience and community.

Most Americans sympathise with the need to restrain the Soviet Union, and to deal with it from a position of strength. But how, some of them ask, does the Administration's picture of Russia as a "hardline" superpower square with its image of Russia as an omnipotent, omniscient and infinitely resourceful enemy? If the two images are compatible, rather than mutually exclusive, how should American policy towards Moscow be conducted?

There are no clear answers, and the tug of war continues. Although Mr Haig, Mr Weinberger and the White House staff contradict one another less in public than they did, the Administration continues to speak with several, often conflicting voices. Mr Reagan himself is a mixture of idealism and ill-informed pragmatism. "With partial exceptions, like arms control, this Administration doesn't actually have a policy towards Moscow," says one veteran observer of Eastern relations. "It has attitudes, but it doesn't have a policy."

Many Americans find that disturbing. The Russians, assuming they share that judgment, presumably find it reassuring. If so, the Soviet leadership — old, new or interim — might feel it can sit this one out. Mr Reagan's second term or, if he loses, or does not run — for his successor. The outcome, in fact, of Washington's own succession struggle.

Donald Macintyre
America's "window of opportunity" which it can use either to put pressure on the Russians or, in an extreme case — though this is a minority view — to precipitate a crisis of the Soviet system itself (not so much Bedtime for Brezhnev, more Apocalypse Now).

At the other end of the spectrum are those who see the Soviet Union as a power which — regardless of who is in charge of its destinies — has continuing and legitimate interests which have to be accommodated. Russia, such "moderates" argue (using "hardline" and "moderate" as rough and ready guides) is both insecure and adventurous, self-sufficient and in need of Western help.

So what is needed is something not so far removed from the "web of relationships" which Dr Kissinger sought to construct, with incentives for "responsible behaviour" by the Russians, penalties for the opposite, and a strong military posture.

The accusation that Reaganite foreign policy is largely a tactical strategy to exploit loopholes in SALT I and II to build up its nuclear forces, especially CBMs — and that further negotiations on strategic arms reduction (not significantly, limitation) must avoid the mistakes made in earlier negotiations.

According to Eugene Rostow, head of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, the American position on START will include calculations involving both numbers of warheads (not launchers) and "throw weight" or destructive power. President Reagan is expected to make an announcement about START when he visits Europe in June, and at the United Nations Disarmament Conference the same month.

The drawback of the American approach is that it assumes Soviet willingness to negotiate away the lead which Washington claims the Russians have unfairly established.

Most Americans sympathise with the need to restrain the Soviet Union, and to deal with it from a position of strength. But how, some of them ask, does the Administration's picture of Russia as a "hardline" superpower square with its image of Russia as an omnipotent, omniscient and infinitely resourceful enemy? If the two images are compatible, rather than mutually exclusive, how should American policy towards Moscow be conducted?

There are no clear answers, and the tug of war continues. Although Mr Haig, Mr Weinberger and the White House staff contradict one another less in public than they did, the Administration continues to speak with several, often conflicting voices. Mr Reagan himself is a mixture of idealism and ill-informed pragmatism. "With partial exceptions, like arms control, this Administration doesn't actually have a policy towards Moscow," says one veteran observer of Eastern relations. "It has attitudes, but it doesn't have a policy."

Many Americans find that disturbing. The Russians, assuming they share that judgment, presumably find it reassuring. If so, the Soviet leadership — old, new or interim — might feel it can sit this one out. Mr Reagan's second term or, if he loses, or does not run — for his successor. The outcome, in fact, of Washington's own succession struggle.

Donald Macintyre
America's "window of opportunity" which it can use either to put pressure on the Russians or, in an extreme case — though this is a minority view — to precipitate a crisis of the Soviet system itself (not so much Bedtime for Brezhnev, more Apocalypse Now).

The man who first showed Britain the news

Twelve years ago, at an age when most men have already retired, Tom Hopkinson assembled 20 or so ill-assorted students at the recently and improbably renamed Centre for Journalism Studies at University College, Cardiff.

Today the Cardiff centre is part of the furniture of British journalism training. But in 1970 the one-year course of which those students were the guinea-pigs was understandably treated with scepticism and disdain by the university authorities and the newspaper industry alike.

Of the class of '71, some, unimpressed by the prospect of the hard slog of a provincial paper, went on to sensible jobs like management traineeships at Marks and Spencer. But three embarked on successful careers with the BBC and others went to regional weekly or evening news.

One, Brian Wilson, to Hopkinson's delight, went off to found the West Highland Free Press, the Hebridean weekly which earlier this month celebrated its tenth anniversary.

For many of us, the principal attraction of the course was Hopkinson himself. A man who had come through advertising and publicity to edit the most successful British picture magazine ever, and was sacked at the height of his success; an editor who managed to be a serious writer throughout his career and successive marriages to three remarkable women; and who was persuaded by the third, Dorothy, to make a fresh start in South Africa at the age of 50 running Drum, a pathfinder magazine for blacks.

Whether he was talking about the discomfiting reaction of his friend George Orwell to the German invasion of Russia — "What about the imprisoned writers?" or, as he did one sunny afternoon after the Life photographer Larry Burrows was killed in Vietnam, giving an impromptu lecture with slides on modern war photography, he always had something interesting to say.

Of this our time, the fascinating first part of Sir Tom Hopkinson's autobiography, is published today. It takes his story to just after his sacking from Picture Post. There is at least one other volume in the pipeline.

Hopkinson's father, Henry, was a remarkable man, a classical archaeologist who asked his children — Tom was then nine — for their approval when he decided to throw up a comfortable academic life and become a clergyman. The family newspaper, not surprisingly, in a somewhat plain-living and high-spirited Lancashire household, was the Manchester Guardian. And it was there that Hopkinson vainly sought a job in his twenties.

"I thought all Guardian leader writers were tweed suits, smoked pipes, and had terriers," he said last week. "But I was prepared to undergo all those hardships if I could realize what was the height of my social and journalistic ambition." In fact his first job — briefly, until it folded — was with the Westminster Gazette. Then came Crawford's, the advertising agency, which he regarded as a prison. He escaped to Odhams' publicity department where, at the height of the Daily Herald's special offer mania, he had an appalling encyclopedia which Herald readers were told contained The Sum Total of All Human Knowledge round eminent academics for their endorsement. Only the Astronomer Royal had the gall to tell him that he and the Herald should be prosecuted for fraud.

"Thank God," Hopkinson characteristically told him, "you're the first one who's given a straight answer."

Angered by unemployment and the Macdonald government's incompetence, Hopkinson produced a lampoon made up of excerpts from ministerial speeches. It was that which propelled him back into journalism, via the doomed Clarion to Picture Post.

Edward Hulton, a supporter of Neville Chamberlain, had started out with the idea of a sixpenny Conservative paper and was confounded when, from the first issue produced by the mercurial Austrian editor Stefan Lorant, was his assistant, his anti-semitic, pro-Labour magazine had been a runaway success.

And so it remained, setting a standard of incisive pictorial journalism that had never been seen in Britain before and now, in this age of instant television coverage, will never be seen again.

In 1950 Hopkinson sent James Cameron and Bert Hardy to cover the Korean war. The second story they sent covered the treatment by the South Koreans of their political prisoners. It was hard-hitting, but Hulton did not want the article used.

Hopkinson resolutely took the line that while it was the proprietor's right to hire and fire the editor, so long as he was in the editor's chair he had the right to decide what went into the magazine. Moreover, he would not resign and if he was to go Hulton would have to dismiss him. Which is what happened.

Disastrously for Hopkinson, the Daily Worker alone had the story. As a result, among those who knew him least, for some years Hopkinson had an undeserved reputation as a fellow traveller. In fact, he is more a fine example of the decent English liberal, an editor who continued to employ the communist Bert Lloyd but who combed through East European magazines to find a picture of a humiliated American prisoner to counterbalance Hardy's pictures of South Korean atrocities.

After Picture Post he freelanced and spent two years as features editor of the News Chronicle. Then came the invitation to go out to Johannesburg to edit Drum.

The African staff at Drum, where Hopkinson worked for three exhilarating and frustrating years, could, he says now, always be relied on in a crisis. But for a lot of the rest of the time they were drunk, or missing, or both.

Like Picture Post, Drum had some great scoops, of which Ian Berry's compelling photographs of the Sharpeville shootings were the most notable.

At the emotional farewell given him by the talented but erratic African staff, Hopkinson said he wished he had been able to hand over to an African editor. It was his conviction of the need to promote African journalists and journalism that first led him into training, first in Nairobi and later at Cardiff.

For many years now he has been a disciple of the Indian master, Meher Baba, whom Dorothy took him to see in the 1950s. The book they both wrote about Baba, swept through his followers in the US and in India. All profits go to the Baba Foundation.

For the most part gentle and mild-mannered, Hopkinson also has a streak of toughness. When a series of articles he wrote for the Rand Daily Mail brought him into conflict with the South African government, a Nationalist politician went too far and said that Hopkinson was a bastard — or, to be precise, his father was a bachelor. Hopkinson sued, doing so, he said, not so much on his own behalf but on that of his father, who happened to be the Archdeacon of Westmorland. He got his money.

He and Dorothy rise each morning at 6.30 in their flat overlooking the Bristol Channel to begin work. When they complete a revision of their book on Meher Baba, he will begin a second volume of autobiography. It will be worth waiting for because at 77, Hopkinson not only has his ideals intact but has as much to say as ever and is saying it just as well.

Donald Macintyre
For many years now he has been a disciple of the Indian master, Meher Baba, whom Dorothy took him to see in the 1950s. The book they both wrote about Baba, swept through his followers in the US and in India. All profits go to the Baba Foundation.

The sparkling way to a brighter union image

Philip Sparks says he knows what makes trade unions so unpopular in Britain. It is that they do not advertise widely or soon enough. Sparks is director of public affairs for the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, the public sector union in the United States. AFSCME is spending $2m this year on an advertising campaign which started four months before their major contract negotiations (which the simple British would probably call "pay talks") are due to begin.

Trade unions, says Sparks, have greater public acceptability than used-car salesmen and politicians, but probably not much. "Our strategy has to be to explain the major negotiating issues, and to hit the public hard with those before the bargainers ever sit down with the employers," he says.

Sparks was in Britain over the weekend to address the annual conference of the Public Relations Consultants Association, and was able to produce some devastating examples of what PR can do if it is turned against industry. A boycott he directed against the Duke Power Corporation sunk the value of its stock by a quarter, and incidentally produced an Oscar-winning documentary, Hartan County USA, as well as a satisfactory settlement.

In his campaign against the J P Stevens textile mill, Sparks used the union's pension fund clout to get Stevens directors sacked from the boards of other companies. In a 11-day strike by miners over the national coal contract, Sparks helped direct publicity "which was a substantial part of our strategy in winning nearly nine-tenths of what we had originally offered, and the best coal contract ever."

Most recently, Sparks has produced a television documentary about a textile workers' dispute. "It was aired by 125 television stations in six months, and the threat of boycott just broke the management's will to resist."

The trouble with industrial relations in Britain, Sparks says, is not that the unions are too powerful, but that they leave it till the pickets are out to explain their case.

Family affair
If Robert Mellish, Labour MP for Bermondsey and former chief whip, is thrown out of the Labour Party it could be his nephew, Tom, who has to start the throwing. Mellish has been complained against for a letter urging voters to support independent, rather than Labour, candidates in Southwark's local elections.

It would be up to Mellish's own Catford ward to start disciplinary proceedings if they are decided upon, and the ward secretary there is Mellish's nephew, Tom.

Chew this over
It is a notorious truth that you cannot eat or drink anything without endangering your health

THE TIMES DIARY

A label guaranteeing that the cloth bearing it is made of pure Falkland Islands wool has proved popular in Italy, Japan and America, but had not caught on in Britain before the invasion.

Colin Smith of J. G. Field in Bradford, agent for 40 farms independent of the Falkland Island Company and himself a partner in a farm, devised the label and had large numbers printed. The only British retailer known to have used them is Austin Reed, for jackets made up of cloth woven in Scotland.

The reverse of the label describes Falkland wool, on which the islanders depend for their livelihood, as having "superb strength, resilience and remarkable softness".

and arts at the GLC, and several suggestions have been made as to where the pieces might go next.

It is most likely that the standing figures will go to Battersea Park and the reclining ones to the grounds of Kenwood House, Hampstead. It would be appropriate to have a Moore at Kenwood, as an unknown artist in the 1930s he had his studio in Hampstead, and he drew people sheltering from the blitz on the platforms of Hampstead tube

Back to Leeds
A converted granary near the harbour at Wells-on-the-sea on the Norfolk coast, best known as the home of whelks, provided the venue for the start of a tour by the young German pianist Wolfgang Manz this weekend.

His next stop is Leeds, where it is widely held, he was robbed last September in the piano competition. With four international awards already to his credit, Manz was placed only second though our own critic, Hilary Finch, paid tribute to his "unsurpassed degree of imaginatively intelligent musicianship".

Saddled
A gift from the Pakistani head of state, General Zia ul-Haq, to his Turkish counterpart, General Evren, is very much alive and kicking after arrival in Ankara. Saqib, an imposing five-year-old stallion of impeccable British and Pakistani ancestry, has proved more than a match for the veteran riders of the presidential guard, who are trying to train him as an Olympic horse.

The bravest officer lasts in the saddle on Saqib's back for 15 seconds at most, and the Turkish press have been treated to a series of pictures of the rearing horse giving the cavaliers experience of aviation. The guards officers attribute Saqib's temper to his annoyance at being taken away from his previous career as a stud.

The five bulls and four cows which accompanied him to his new country are said to be perfectly content "improving the quality of Turkish livestock" at the various state farms to which they have been distributed.

Pettifoggery
Nearly half the administration costs of the EEC go on translation and interpretation. In 1979 the cost was about £214m. This year it will far exceed £250m. Understandably the Commission is backing a £8.5m research programme to produce a computer-based translation

Despite the expense, standards of translation are often surprisingly high. The official journal of the European Communities recently headed a question by a Danish Conservative MP asking for a survey over Danish fish and fish products at Italian frontiers.

From the list of tricks the Italians get up to, I thought "skulduggery" might have been better. In the other Community languages the equivalent of "cheekiness" was generally used. Yet now we have consulted a dictionary, and "pettifoggery" looks excellent. It comes from a paltry, cavilling lawyer — a pettifogger. Europe is full of them.

Paying for playing
Have modern composers lost their touch? Genichi Kawakami, president of the Yamada Music Foundation, fears they may have. He is offering cash prizes up to £1,000 to composers who can perform their own music in public, as Mozart and Chopin did.

Kawakami's rules are not unduly restrictive. Composers can play on any instrument they wish, as long as they play a "significant part" in the performance. The winners of this competition will take part in a concert in Tokyo in December.

Trenchermen
A day or two after saying goodbye to the Pope, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Robert Runcie, will be principal guest at the Food and Drink Industries Council luncheon at the Portico Tun room in Whitbread's City brewery. The lunch is on June 3, the day after the Pope leaves Britain.

That Dr Runcie has accepted the invitation, I am told, is largely due to Sir Hector Laing, chairman of United Biscuits and a former chairman of the North Africa campaign of the last war.

One could say that many of Sir Hector's important connections are built upon sand. Earlier this year he lost his aeroplane to a pilot, and for his trip to Tangiers in search of his son Mark, he used the Sahara.

You will find no more jokes about the Argentines in the Falklands in this column, but I could not resist this: the Pis in 1839, having been implicated in the commission of an unnatural crime for want of a woman, is mentioned twice in the census of 1838. The first time his name is given as Louis Depredat, but the second it appears as Louis Desperate.

Quiz answers
1. Sales of Scotch whisky fell by a third last year.
2. The Queen, who is said by her family to put on a "pity face".
3. Peter Ustinov. It will be an attraction at this year's Edinburgh Festival.
4. The hang glider pilot, Peter Calvert.

Chronicle
From Miss Sir. Folio spence, the problem should be of what is feature in

Reagan rattle remlin?

P.O. Box 7, 200 Gray's Inn Road, London WC1X 8EZ. Telephone: 01-837 1234

THE TIMES MONDAY APRIL 26 1982

9

TIME TO TAKE SIDES

The landing on South Georgia takes the Falklands crisis into a new and potentially still more dangerous phase. But it is consistent with international law and with the British strategy of seeking to remove Argentine control by a proportionate response. This is the first time in the crisis that Britain has taken forceful action, as distinct from threatening it. But it is still a response to aggression, not an aggressive act itself, so it comes within the definition of self-defence. It is also the least that could have been done in the circumstances if the task force was not to be left indefinitely cruising around the islands, itself vulnerable to attack and potential disaster. But if this action is justified, as it is, what chance is there of securing a satisfactory settlement that will prevent the conflict moving on to an even more dangerous level?

Up to now hopes of a just and peaceful solution have been pinned to Mr Haig's mediating mission. It was always a fine point as to whether the influence of the United States could most effectively be brought to bear by playing this role or as Britain's open and declared supporter. But the United States was undoubtedly better placed than anyone else to act as mediator.

Mr Haig assumed the task with zeal and he deserved support and encouragement so long as he seemed to stand up to his responsibilities. However, it became more and more evident, after Mr Haig's visit to Washington, that he was in danger of being reduced from the noble role of a mediator to that of a despairing diplomatic courier. For him to have continued his mission beyond that point would have contributed neither to the dignity of his Government nor to the cause of international peace. The operations yesterday in South Georgia demonstrate that Britain had come to this sombre conclusion. Do they now give Mr Haig another chance, or is there some other process which can assist the cause of a just solution to the crisis?

A course that has been widely canvassed is to seek mediation by the United Nations. A distinction needs to be drawn here between the part that the United Nations might possibly play under any settlement and the part that it might play in bringing a settlement about. Before asking the United Nations to play a negotiating role, the first question that must be asked is what reason there is to suppose that it could do the job more successfully than Mr Haig. Would Argentina — or Britain — come to that really find it harder to resist pressure from the customarily discordant voices of the United Nations than from the most powerful country in the world, in whose good graces both Argentina and Britain must hope to sit?

But, it might be said, with shots now being exchanged would it make matters any worse if the UN had a go, even if it failed? The answer is that it might make matters worse in a number of respects. The UN is not a body in which there can be confidence that a complex issue would be dealt with consistently on the merits of the case. The Security Council certainly responded promptly and appropriately to the invasion of the islands by passing Resolution 502. That Resolution stands, and Britain's action yesterday does not conflict with its stated injunction to Argentina to remove its forces from the islands. But conflicting pressures might soon become apparent in the UN under the pressure of this crisis.

One of the principal fears of the western alliance throughout this emergency is that it might offer the Soviet Union the opportunity for further activity in the American hemisphere. But would it be possible to keep the Soviet Union out of the process for long in these circumstances? It is also customary in the United Nations for positions to be taken up on the basis of trading votes between different groups. That has been avoided so far in the UN's response to the Falklands crisis, but it has been asked to take only the simple stand on principle. If it is to play a larger part, the wishes and interests of the islanders, could easily become lost in the intricacies of United Nations politics. Above all, there must be the fear that once an issue goes to the UN for mediation it is very difficult to get it back again. This would be a positive advantage if the purpose were simply to find a respectable means of prolonging the process of negotiation in order to avoid armed conflict. But under present circumstances it would perpetuate Argentine control of the Falklands.

Mediation by the UN is therefore not the answer. Is there any other method of securing a just settlement, short of a much fuller military response than yesterday's affair? It should be clear by now that Argentina will respond only to pressure, not to persuasion. Mr Haig brought to bear a degree of diplomatic pressure, which proved inadequate. The time has now come when this will need to be supplemented with economic pressure. There are two reasons why the United States ought now to be ready to impose economic sanctions once the role of mediator is no longer appropriate: to induce Argentina to make concessions and to demonstrate to British opinion that their American ally is prepared to do at least as much in a just cause as their European partners.

It would not make much sense for the United States to apply to Argentina the sanctions that it earlier imposed against Iran because, unlike Iran, Argentina has no major assets in the United States. Sanctions against Argentina could take one of two forms: restrictions against imports from that country, along the lines of those imposed by the European Community, or advice to American banks not to renew credit to Argentina.

Neither course would be painless for the United States. A trade embargo would intensify feeling against the United States in Latin America, and credit restraint would not be welcome to the banking community within the United States. But economic sanctions never are painless to impose. The United States has from time to time found it necessary to ask its allies to take action that would be disagreeable for them. Yesterday's events make it all the more important, for itself, as for its allies that it now returns the compliment.

ANOTHER WAR: ANOTHER PEACE?

It is said that Israel's withdrawal of its last forces from the Sinai peninsula should have been marked by scenes of destruction — homes demolished, trees uprooted, toilet fittings ripped out and air conditioners smashed. Of course the Israeli settlers were resentful of Egypt's unwillingness to let them stay in settlements which their hard work had conjured from the bare desert of fifteen years ago. That is understandable that Egyptians did not want to legitimize and perpetuate a foreign presence made possible by military occupation. Peaceful immigration voluntarily accepted by a sovereign state is one thing; colonization is another. In agreeing to withdraw lock stock and barrel from all the occupied Egyptian territory in return for peace, and in sticking to that agreement in spite of all the pain and uncertainty it involved, Israel showed her better self.

The unfortunate details should obscure the importance of what has happened. Egypt under President Sadat took the road to peace through direct negotiations. All Arab leaders before Sadat had excused themselves from taking that road, pointing out that Israel's stated positions ruled out any hope of achieving through negotiations even minimum Arab demands. Had not Moshe Dayan declared that he would prefer Sharm al-Shaikh without peace to peace without Sharm al-Shaikh? Did not Mr Begin, even after President Sadat's visit to Jerusalem in 1977, insist that under any peace treaty Israeli settlements in Sinai would remain, "linked to Israeli administration and law" and "defended by an Israeli force"? Did he not, indeed, reserve a bungalow in one of those settlements for his own retirement? Yet Israel yesterday left Sharm al-Shaikh, and all the Israeli settlements in Sinai have been abandoned. When Dayan made his remark, no one really believed that Egypt would be willing to sign a peace treaty, with or without Sharm al-Shaikh. Once a peace treaty was actually on offer, Israel reacted quite differently.

Could other Arabs expect an analogous reaction if they presented themselves at the conference table, forswearing in advance — as Sadat did — any intentions of pursuing their quarrel with Israel further by warlike means? Would a Syrian leader, bearing the olive branch to Jerusalem, find Israel willing after all to "come down from the Golan Heights" under a peace treaty which installed a Multilateral Force and Observers on those Heights, notwithstanding so many past official declarations to the contrary, culminating in the law passed by the Knesset last December? Above all, would the Palestinians, whether represented by the PLO or by some other body, find Israel willing to allow them self-determination in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip provided they bowed in advance to international pressure and unequivocally recognized the right of Israel to exist within its pre-1967 borders?

The official Israeli answer to those questions, of course, remains firmly negative — at any rate so long as they are posed only conditionally, and by outsiders; which is the only way they will be posed in the foreseeable future since the Arab parties concerned have no hesitation in accepting this negative response at its face value. Only Egypt, supported rather half-heartedly by some Western countries, is urging the opposite view, and advertising its own success to fellow-Arabs as proof of the benefits of negotiation.

If Western countries are half-hearted about backing this Egyptian argument it is because they are themselves far from convinced that Israel would be as generous to Syria, or still less the Palestinians, as it has been to Egypt. Israel's response to Egypt, difficult and risky though it was, was dictated by a consistent Israeli strategy based on the assessment that Egypt is an essential ingredient in any serious Arab threat to Israel's security. Major concessions were worth making to secure Egypt's neutrality. That once achieved, most Israeli strategists would see further concessions, even as the price of peace with the rest of the Arab world, as likely to impair Israel's security rather than enhance it.

It is probable that those Israeli strategists are wrong in the long term. Indeed the very doubts that many Israelis now feel about Egypt's sticking to the peace treaty would hardly arise if peace had been achieved with the Arab world as a whole. But as long as the all-out conflict between Israel and the Palestinians persists, Egypt's Arab loyalties and interests are going to be in conflict with her peace treaty obligations (even though the latter, for the moment, represent a stronger interest), and the risk of a new war from which Egypt would be unable to stand apart, or of a change of government resulting in a change of Egypt's alignment, will remain. And even if Egypt's neutrality can be counted on, Israel's present superiority over all other Arab forces combined is not necessarily a permanent phenomenon. The United States, it is true, is committed to maintaining that Israeli "qualitative edge". But the cost of doing so is rising constantly in financial terms, and could rise very steeply in political terms if it proved to be a real threat to the stability of Saudi Arabia — or even if the Saudi rulers merely decided to treat it as such and therefore moved to distance themselves from the United States by radically changing their policies.

If that moment came, and American policy had to be revised drastically in the middle of a major crisis, the consequences both for Israel and for the West could be very bad. It would be much better for both to negotiate from strength, to convince the Arabs now that the benefits of the Sadat approach are not confined to Egypt.

Chronic disorders

From Miss Jane Edmundson

Sir, Following the recent correspondence in your columns about the problems of modern living, I should like to point out a danger of what is supposed to be a safety feature in many modern cars.

Last week I was involved in a car accident. As they were wearing seat belts, the driver and front passenger escaped unhurt, but I was thrown against the back of the driver's head-restraint and received a very nasty cut above the eye, requiring nine stitches. According to the policeman who dealt with the accident this is not an uncommon type of injury. Would it be too much to ask for a little padding to cushion these rigid head-restraints?

Yours faithfully,
JANE EDMUNDSON,
Flat 4,
167 West End Lane, NW6.
April 21.

Study of appeals procedures

From Mr David Jeffreys, QC, and others

Sir, We have noted with interest the recent coverage in The Times and elsewhere recording the concern felt in various quarters as to possible shortcomings in our procedures for reviewing criminal convictions and we have read with concern the examples of alleged miscarriages of justice which are said to have gone uncorrected by the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) and by the Home Office.

The Criminal Bar Association has been concerned for a long time about possible methods of improving the way in which the courts and the executive deal with criminal appeals and recently formed a subcommittee of the association which has been inquiring into these matters for the last six months.

We are in the process of soundings the views of numerous practitioners, officials and organizations who have practical experience of the problems involved and we are anxious to write our report and submit our recommendations as a matter of urgency. We should be most keen, therefore, to hear from anyone who feels that they have a suggestion to contribute and we are grateful to you for extending the debate.

Yours faithfully,
DAVID JEFFREYS,
JOHN MARRIAGE,
NEVILLE SARONY,
JONATHAN CAPLAN,
5 Paper Buildings,
Temple, EC4.
April 23.

Darwinian evolution

From Dr Jim Dorrain

Sir, According to Mr Booker (feature, April 19) Darwin's theory of natural selection is "full of colossal holes" because "no intermediate species" each replaced by a new one in the fossil record. This statement is worthy of the tortuous meanderings of a Tennessee fundamentalist.

Taking the marine fossil record first, the evolutionary sequence of the Mesozoic ammonites has been worked out in such meticulous detail that not only are a great number of intermediate end species known, but they provide the most reliable key for correlating strata of this age. Considering the equally marine environment of the Mesozoic, it would appear that new species evolved not by natural selection, but under the biological constraint that at each locus in the chromosomes of the cells of a total generation, a gene mutation takes place about once in every half-million individuals. In geological time this is a frequent occurrence.

In contrast to marine evolution, the 60 million year evolution of the horse is documented beyond all question in the fossil record: from the tiny ancestor about the size of a fox terrier, through the dog-like forms and marshlands, with flat paws, the horse grew in size and gradually came to use its middle finger more and more, i.e. it commenced to run on finger tips. Eventually, in answer to increased aridity and the development of prairie lands, the adaptation became complete; speed, size and stamina were essential to survive and the finger became the hoof as we know it. This well documented evolutionary sequence is a beautiful example of natural selection at work.

It is of course far more difficult to find complete fossil sequences in continental rocks, where preservation is in general poor, than in well preserved marine rocks.

Had Darwin been alive when the important discoveries in cellular biology and genetics were made public, he would have been able to present practically the complete mechanics of natural selection.

Yours faithfully,
JIM DORRAIN, Director,
Premier Consolidated Oilfields Limited,
23 Lower Belgrave Street, SW1.

Worship and doctrine

From the Reverend I. H. S. Stratton

Sir, Mr Frank Field (April 16) has unwittingly stated the weakness in his own case. If, as he states, "what was technically known as Series 1... was in fact the form of service used by most parishes in the Church of England for the greater part of this century", then the Church was doing the very thing that the House of Commons tried to stop it from doing when collisions occurred in December, 1927, and June, 1928, and using forms of worship approved by its own representative body but not authorized by Parliament.

Yours faithfully,
IAN STRATTON,
14 Fawcett Road,
Salisbury.
April 19.

Cash or crisis

From Mr George Curtis

Sir, I have considerable sympathy with the views of the people represented by Messrs Secret and Rose in their letter today (April 15). However, writing as a tenant farmer in a small way of business and as one subjected to considerable expense and labour relative to the size of my business by conservation considerations, so far as farming is concerned, I find them very naive.

Many of the sites that they are most interested in are on marginal land. It is on this land that the greatest pressures frequently occur, since it is by definition difficult to farm and as a

British scientists in Antarctica

From the Director of the British Antarctic Survey

Sir, It is reported (The Times, April 21 and 22) that British Antarctic Survey (BAS) scientists have gone into hiding and are becoming increasingly worried for their own safety. I would like to set the record straight.

Four BAS personnel at a permanent station on Bird Island, some of whom were intended to winter there, are carrying on with their work. Two men occupying a field hut at Schlieper Bay had finished their summer programme here; they were due to be picked up by the Bransfield this month and are waiting to return to Cambridge.

Two girls making a wildlife film are based at a field hut in St Andrew's Bay and were also due to return home this month. When hostilities seemed imminent, three men from our Grytviken station joined them to give them support. Four other men, including Grytviken moved to the Church at Grytviken whaling station half a mile away across the cove.

Being civilians, my men had no place in any fighting and it was sensible for them to distance themselves from it. After the break-up of the BAS base commander notified the Argentine commander of the location of the other Britishers and asked that they be collected and repatriated. This has not been done.

None of the danger to them is least if they remain where they are. They have reported to me daily that they are safe and well but naturally apprehensive; some of them are also cold and uncomfortable.

The Bransfield which, in the normal course of events, would have reached South Georgia and completed this season's transfer of personnel has, for obvious reasons, been instructed not to enter South Georgia waters.

Finally, our men are inexplicably said that this beautiful, isolated island, with the birds and seals as the only indigenous inhabitants, should have been the object of unprovoked aggression. R. M. LAWS, Director,
British Antarctic Survey,
High Cross,
Madingley Road, Cambridge.
April 22.

From Sir Donald Logan

Sir, The spotlight on the Falklands has so far shed little light on their true relationship with Antarctica.

It is misleading to describe the Falklands as Antarctic. They are much more like the Orkneys or Shetlands or even parts of Scotland, while the vast Antarctic continent some thousand miles to the south is like the higher Alps, only more so.

Nor is British sovereignty in Antarctica dependent upon our sovereignty in the Falkland Islands. British sovereignty in Antarctica arises from our early exploration and subsequent administration and occupation of part of the periphery of the continent, based on sovereignty over a sector extending to the Pole. France, Norway, New Zealand, Australia and Chile have also made similar claims.

The only country which seeks to deny the notion that sovereignty in Antarctica derives from sovereignty over territory outside Antarctica is Argentina.

Other countries have not introduced this notion into Antarctica and in any case claims to sovereignty are regarded as frozen for the purposes of the Antarctic Treaty of 1959.

British territory in Antarctica was at one time included for administrative purposes in the Falkland Islands Dependencies, but since 1962 they have been

Letters to the Editor

From the Director of the British Antarctic Survey

Sir, I am writing to warn you and your readers of the dangers which now exist in visiting eastern Sicily.

Catania, because of its location between Mount Etna and the sea, together with the lack of a bypass road, must be crossed by all car traffic coming from southern and western Sicily and going to the north-east. Owing to inadequate streets to handle such traffic, enormous hold-ups occur and it may take an hour to cross the city.

Catania has recently been infested with gangs of youths on motor cycles who attack cars, especially foreign-registered cars, when they are blocked in the traffic and seize any objects of value such as handbags, wallets, jewelry or necklaces and then escape down a side street. This year this crime has reached almost epidemic proportions and the local police admit that they have no means of countering it.

Only yesterday, at 11 am, my car was attacked while my wife and I were inside and it was stopped in a traffic jam. Although the doors were locked, a window was smashed with a hammer and my wife's handbag seized. Because the danger is known locally, this contained only the minimum of necessities but did include car papers, which you are obliged to carry with you.

Most people, and particularly those who arrive at Catania airport and hire cars, usually lose their money and passports, sometimes within half an hour of arrival.

In the case of loss of passports, it should be noted that HMG, unlike many other governments, does not have a consulate in eastern Sicily, the only British consulate being at Palermo.

Yours faithfully,
JOHN TATHAM,
Hotel Times,
Taormina, Sicily.
April 16.

Sports medical facilities

From Dr H. Beric Wright

Sir, Your recent article (April 8) about the need to improve sports medical facilities was both timely and apposite. Another area of possibly greater need is that of the physiological assessment of athletes in relation to their degree of training and performance potential.

Partly because of the lack of overall medical supervision in some sports, we were asked in 1980 by the British Olympic Association to provide a health screening facility for the entire, if ill-fated, British team for the last Olympics. This we did as an act of sponsorship and it did reveal medical need but also took us into the field of physiological assessment.

Britain appears to be the only major country without such a centre; Italy, for instance, has an admirable one. We are now actively trying to identify enough, if necessary sponsored users, to make a unit viable. We do not need capital but do want to be assured that the centre will be used enough to pay its way. It implies recognition by the governing bodies and perhaps some financial help for their members.

A centre such as we are planning could easily be extended to include sports injuries and we already have the diagnostic facilities. It could quickly become a centre of excellence for the whole country.

I am etc,
H. BERIC WRIGHT,
Deputy Chairman,
BUPA Medical Centre,
Bartle Bridge House,
300 Gray's Inn Road, WC1.
April 10.

Ways across the water

From Mr E. Arlington

Sir, Your leading article (April 14) concerning the case against building a Channel tunnel refers to the Dover Harbour Board's claim to carry traffic as efficiently and comfortably and more cheaply by ferry service.

It is quite true that the report stated that the majority of pupils still adequately served, but this is hardly an enthusiastic commendation of the effects of spending cuts on the majority of schools and, if you couple this with not only the stringent criticisms of the effects of cuts on various areas of provision and with the Government's firm intention to cut education expenditure in real terms in the future, then I think the future is very worrying.

Perhaps the greatest cause for concern is Sir Keith Joseph's immediate response to the report, which gave no indication whatsoever that he understood the real problems faced by the schools as a result of cuts.

Indeed, Sir Keith's response makes one wonder whether the Government of which he is a minister has a real commitment to the pursuit of appropriate standards of provision and attainment in the schools.

Yours faithfully,
DAVID HART,
The National Association of Head Teachers,
6 Paddockhall Road,
Haywards Heath, West Sussex.
April 20.

Championship rules

From Mrs Mary Cordingley

Sir, If the bureaucrats who control the Wimbledon championships must have their rules, let them make a new one: "That any player who has won five times or more may enter without the qualifying matches." It is unlikely to be invoked too often.

Yours faithfully,
MARY CORDINGLEY,
Church Cottage,
Shotesham, Norwich.

Perils for tourists in Catania

From Mr John Tatham

Sir, I am writing to warn you and your readers of the dangers which now exist in visiting eastern Sicily.

Catania, because of its location between Mount Etna and the sea, together with the lack of a bypass road, must be crossed by all car traffic coming from southern and western Sicily and going to the north-east. Owing to inadequate streets to handle such traffic, enormous hold-ups occur and it may take an hour to cross the city.

Catania has recently been infested with gangs of youths on motor cycles who attack cars, especially foreign-registered cars, when they are blocked in the traffic and seize any objects of value such as handbags, wallets, jewelry or necklaces and then escape down a side street. This year this crime has reached almost epidemic proportions and the local police admit that they have no means of countering it.

Only yesterday, at 11 am, my car was attacked while my wife and I were inside and it was stopped in a traffic jam. Although the doors were locked, a window was smashed with a hammer and my wife's handbag seized. Because the danger is known locally, this contained only the minimum of necessities but did include car papers, which you are obliged to carry with you.

Most people, and particularly those who arrive at Catania airport and hire cars, usually lose their money and passports, sometimes within half an hour of arrival.

In the case of loss of passports, it should be noted that HMG, unlike many other governments, does not have a consulate in eastern Sicily, the only British consulate being at Palermo.

Yours faithfully,
JOHN TATHAM,
Hotel Times,
Taormina, Sicily.
April 16.

Sports medical facilities

From Dr H. Beric Wright

Sir, Your recent article (April 8) about the need to improve sports medical facilities was both timely and apposite. Another area of possibly greater need is that of the physiological assessment of athletes in relation to their degree of training and performance potential.

Partly because of the lack of overall medical supervision in some sports, we were asked in 1980 by the British Olympic Association to provide a health screening facility for the entire, if ill-fated, British team for the last Olympics. This we did as an act of sponsorship and it did reveal medical need but also took us into the field of physiological assessment.

Britain appears to be the only major country without such a centre; Italy, for instance, has an admirable one. We are now actively trying to identify enough, if necessary sponsored users, to make a unit viable. We do not need capital but do want to be assured that the centre will be used enough to pay its way. It implies recognition by the governing bodies and perhaps some financial help for their members.

A centre such as we are planning could easily be extended to include sports injuries and we already have the diagnostic facilities. It could quickly become a centre of excellence for the whole country.

I am etc,
H. BERIC WRIGHT,
Deputy Chairman,
BUPA Medical Centre,
Bartle Bridge House,
300 Gray's Inn Road, WC1.
April 10.

Ways across the water

From Mr E. Arlington

Sir, Your leading article (April 14) concerning the case against building a Channel tunnel refers to the Dover Harbour Board's claim to carry traffic as efficiently and comfortably and more cheaply by ferry service.

It is quite true that the report stated that the majority of pupils still adequately served, but this is hardly an enthusiastic commendation of the effects of spending cuts on the majority of schools and, if you couple this with not only the stringent criticisms of the effects of cuts on various areas of provision and with the Government's firm intention to cut education expenditure in real terms in the future, then I think the future is very worrying.

Perhaps the greatest cause for concern is Sir Keith Joseph's immediate response to the report, which gave no indication whatsoever that he understood the real problems faced by the schools as a result of cuts.

Indeed, Sir Keith's response makes one wonder whether the Government of which he is a minister has a real commitment to the pursuit of appropriate standards of provision and attainment in the schools.

Yours faithfully,
DAVID HART,
The National Association of Head Teachers,
6 Paddockhall Road,
Haywards Heath, West Sussex.
April 20.

Championship rules

From Mrs Mary Cordingley

Sir, If the bureaucrats who control the Wimbledon championships must have their rules, let them make a new one: "That any player who has won five times or more may enter without the qualifying matches." It is unlikely to be invoked too often.

Yours faithfully,
MARY CORDINGLEY,
Church Cottage,
Shotesham, Norwich.

THE ARTS

Television Normal mystery

In the house of a retired vicar, a table begins to levitate; giggles all round. Last night Credo (LWT) examined the state of psychological research in this country. "Why," the narrator asked, "do we understand so little about the paranormal?" When I see a retired vicar, no doubt familiar with the mysteries of the Incarnation and the Resurrection, trying to raise a table I begin to wonder why we understand so little about the normal.

The programme took as its occasion the centenary of the Society for Psychical Research, an organization which adopted a "respectfully Victorian attitude" towards the paranormal in its attempt to find "indisputable scientific evidence" for strange phenomena. The effort goes on; Credo showed us an experimental centre where subjects testing the powers of thought transfer—once were strapped to equipment which rivals that of Cape Canaveral in its complexity. The results are open to question, variously interpreted by the sceptical and the convinced. Like psychiatry, it works if you believe in it.

But there seems to be some confusion of intention among the devotees: if the paranormal is susceptible to scientific proof, it ceases to be paranormal. It is relegated to the context of ordinary knowledge. For those who wish to retain its mystery—and the appetite for mystery often refuels such beliefs—it would be better if it remained stubbornly resistant to the apparatus of hypothesis and experiment. Credo itself suggested a way out of this dilemma which will please everyone: we were told that psychical research depends upon the attitude of the experimenter. It is a deal with material which cannot be measured and which often can only be assumed.

If this is correct, then quite by accident it has anticipated the methods and material of contemporary science: you have only to turn to the Science report in this newspaper to see that molecular physics and astrophysics are dealing with phenomena just as strange and inexplicable as those of psychokinesis or levitation, with quarks like delicious poltergeists, black holes like ghosts in the cosmos. In fact, the more the scientific inquiry comes to depend upon the unseen and the merely hypothetical, the more the "paranormal" will be seen to be the basis of all reality. And then, by one of those strange paradoxes of human knowledge, the conventional paraphernalia of psychical research—and Credo covered most of the familiar ground—will become the popular image of science itself.

What is truth, after all? Of course Credo did not stay for an answer, perhaps because there is none. Robert Nye put the same point very well on The South Bank Show (LWT). He is one of our finest writers because, if he put it here, "I like to be able to lie and to fantasize." He has discovered by indirection the source of all art, in myths and dreams which are more potent than any reality. Those who are trying to "prove" the paranormal may be going in quite the wrong direction.

Peter Ackroyd

Interview: Robert Hardy

The classical style

This had better start with a declaration of faint interest, in that Robert Hardy and I are distantly related by marriage; but if both your maternal grandparents happened to have married three times, as did mine, it is hard to find many people in the South of England to whom you are not distantly related by marriage. An interviewer who ruled out all such encounters would rapidly end up talking to himself.

So much for private matters; professionally, Robert Hardy is about to make a return to the theatre after more than eight years away from television. What brings him back to the Mermelade on May 4 with previous firm next Thursday) is Frith Banbury's production of Dear Liar, the two-hander based on the letters of George Bernard Shaw and Mrs Patrick Campbell, who is played by Susan Phillips. Hardy's former "wife" in last winter's eminently successful television series about Churchill in the 1930s, The Wilderness Years.

Perhaps as result of that television teaming, or perhaps because Dear Liar has been a consistent box-office winner since it was first cobbled together by Jerome Kilby in 1957 (it has just finished another long and triumphant run in Paris with Jean Marais and Edwige Fenech), the new Banbury production has already been playing to good business on tour, one which Hardy undertook with considerable trepidation.

"Eight years is a long time to spend away from the theatre, and as the last thing I did was to replace Alec Guinness in Habes Corpus in 1974, I was in a bit of a bind. I was involved in an altogether new stage production. And that was a disaster which opened one Christmas at the Fortune and was off by New Year's Eve. Sean Connery was directed to the theatre, and it was another disaster. They were living in a large house in Wimbledon with no furniture at all, and when the rehearsals began to go really badly wrong Connery said perhaps it would be better if I went to live with them for a while, so that we could work through the evenings as well, and all they had in this house was a huge glass cabinet which they said concentrated the mind wonderfully, so they used to make me sit in it every morning for twenty minutes before we started rehearsing. It didn't do a lot for the production, but it was an interesting time and I rather think my concentration has improved because of it."

This time things have been going rather better. Robert Hardy might think of us as a couple of tele-stars trying to clamber back into the straight theatre, but audiences have been very appreciative except for one lady at a Guildford matinee who, when I asked her to bang my fist on the desk, complained about the awful noise. But it's a lot of work: two and a half hours, never off stage, ageing Shaw from 40 to 80 through his correspondence with Churchill, but I did some careful listening to a lot of his radio tapes and I think I've got the cadence about right."

For somebody who started in the classical theatre, indeed made his stage debut with what was then the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre company (in 1949), Robert Hardy has had a somewhat unexpected career. It is hard to think, now, of any actor who has over the last twenty years done more consistently distinguished work in television. He has been in Elizabeth R, Prince Albert in Edward VII, Malcolm Campbell in Speed King, the eccentric hotelier in Fothergill (another of Hardy's many small-screen award-winners) and, on a more popular front, the Sigmund Freud character in All Creatures Great and Small, the chief foreman in Mogul and the German sergeant in Manhunt. In terms of sheer survival, and of the vast range of the character roles he has played, Hardy alone has been in British television of the 1960s and 1970s much longer than Guinness was to British films of the 1940s. But it was not originally what he meant to do with his life as an actor, and had it not been for one blazing and career-shaping row with Peter Hall he would almost certainly have spent the best years of his life at either Stratford or the Vic.

The child of a military family, he started acting as an undergraduate at Oxford during the war, in the days when Nevill Coghill at that university and George Rylands at Cambridge were running what often seemed to be the academic extension-courses of RADA. With Richard Burton he went through Oxford, the Air Force in the last months of the war and then the Stratford of the late 1940s.

"We had in common a passionate desire to act, preferably in Shakespeare, and above all to redeem the notion of Prince Hal as hero. Olivier was our great idol. But he was playing Hotspur during that celebrated Vic season at the New he had thrown the whole balance of the Henry IV plays off-centre. They had become plays about Hotspur, and Hal was allowed to live only in his shadow. This seemed all wrong. Hardy did not get to play Hal until the 1955 season at the Vic, but he understudied Burton long before that and later played the role again for television in the first and second series of the BBC's Shakespeare cycle, An Age of Kings.

"That was twenty years ago, and we had a much easier time than anyone trying to do Shakespeare on television today. In the first place there was an audience still hungry for the classics, and willing to accept a heightened language; now all they want is naturalism. Secondly we were much less beset by techniques and machinery; it was all new, and we learnt as we went along. Doing Henry IV we had to cut 35 minutes off the air during a live transmission, because we'd forgotten that it was the Queen Mother's sixtieth birthday and so we couldn't have our usual over-run. There was a sense in which the rug was always about to be pulled out from under us, but actors should be used to that and we survived."

More than that, they made the series against which all future television Shakespeare was to be judged and, usually, found wanting. But though Hardy was, by 1960, already experienced in television (suitably enough he had played David Copperfield in the BBC's first classic serial) his intention was to stay in the theatre. He had already done some distinguished work for Guthrie at the Vic, and made a rather less distinguished Broadway debut in an Emlyn Williams thriller.

"A lovely old actor called Leo G. Carroll, one of those very dry Hollywood English who had remained like a preserved oakeaf under the pressures of America, decided on the first night that we both needed cheering up so he took me to the only genuine English oyster bar in America and fed me 12 oysters and I spent the whole of the first act throwing up all over the seat. So much for an American career, though I did also once briefly settle in California, for fundamentally romantic reasons, and try my luck in Hollywood where all I got was a bit in a Glenn Ford film and a lot of people thinking I must be queer because I sounded so English."

It was therefore with something

"I seem to have a television reputation as an impersonator of the famous . . ."

akin to relief that, while he was in California, Hardy got a summons from Guthrie who wanted him back at Stratford for the King of France opposite Edith Evans in a 1959 All's Well. That remarkable season he also played leading roles in the Charles Laughton Leah, the Olivier Coriolanus and the Tony Richardson Midsummer Night's Dream, and so when in the following year Hall took over from Byam Shaw at Stratford it seemed a pity that he could offer Hardy one of the first of the RSC's three-year contracts.

"Then, however, before we could start rehearsing, there was a major falling-out. I happened to overhear Hall at a lunch saying that he thought of me as one of the pillars of the middle of the company and somehow by then I thought that, considering the parts I'd been playing, I deserved a bit better than the middle; so I told him and Barton they should go back to Cambridge and concentrate their education and not surprisingly I've never worked for Peter Hall, or indeed at Stratford, from that day to this. I think I also said something about how much I disliked directors taking charge of entire companies; the theatre is about writers first and actors second and directors third, and they should never be allowed to transcend that unless they are of superhuman size like Guthrie. How many more?"

Which was in its barest detail, how Stratford lost a leading actor and the BBC acquired one. Since then, Hardy has given his Hamlet for a summer theatre near Chicago, made West End appearances in The Rehearsal and A Severed Head, and concentrated the rest of his energies on minutely-researched television documentaries on Agincourt and (more recently) Gordon of Khartoum. He has also published the definitive military history of the longbow, and if they ever do find a forgotten sledge in his garden the lettering on it will doubtless spell out Hal rather than Rosebud. In the meantime, it would be nice if the RSC or the National awoke to the classical talent they have allowed to slip out of their reach.

Sheridan Morley

Theatre

The Prince of Homburg

Cottesloe

In launching Heinrich von Heintz on the London public, the National Theatre has sensibly opted for a "new readers start here" studio production, rather than a main house military spectacular. In its time The Prince of Homburg has been a star exhibit, but in the Nazi repertoire, on Germany's postwar Marxist stage, and there is everything to be said for a quietly searching exploration of the text, uncoloured by any strong directorial viewpoint.

With no more than a sky-cloth and a few isolated furnishings, its narrative outline takes shape with elegant clarity on the Cottesloe stage. An hallucinatory first scene establishes the Prince's private dream of glory; then we see him acting it out by disobeying orders at the Battle of Fehrbellin and going out to defeat the Swedes, for which he is rewarded with a death sentence. Intercession by his beloved, Princess Natalie moves the Elector to offer a reprieve if the Prince himself considers the sentence one, just an offer which the Prince refuses, as it enables him to come to terms with his own death.

At this noble resolution, the Elector tears up the warrant, thus converting the individualist hero into a religious devotee to the State of Brandenburg.

"What comes over most forcibly in John Burgess's production is the sight of a protagonist who lives by an inhumanly exacting code of honour, breaking down in straightforward terror of death when he sees his grave being dug; and then, when he is given the chance of escape, refusing to seize it because he cannot. And the right words for a letter of acceptance.

Patrick Drury's Prince has the contemplative look of a poetic outsider in a military society, but his delayed-action responses do nothing to tell you what is on his mind. Lindsay Duncan, as Natalie, is a beautiful girl, but her generalised sympathy and distress without defining any personal tastes beyond an admiration for displays of male heroics. The Elector is extremely well played by Robert Urichart as a sensually approachable monarch, too confident of his own status ever to assert it.

Irving Wardle

Good Aldwych

Just as there appears to be no limit to the evil men can inflict on one another, there should be no limit to our attempts to understand. It is a fashion to suggest that Hitler is beyond comprehension, and that even such serious writers as George Steiner had best leave him alone. Certainly, any serious examination deserves an equally rigorous examination from an audience, but there is a deft, telling moment in C. P. Taylor's play Good which should damn the censorious instinct. A book-burning Nazi asks for a translation of a French title, "Remembering the Past", responds Halder, Taylor's protagonist. The Nazi's response is that that cannot be good, and he sends Proust into the bonfire.

Taylor's play, deservedly the first commercial presentation at the Aldwych since the departure of the RSC, has earned its transfer to the Aldwych as it sets out to show how a "good" liberal German professor becomes a good servant of the Nazis. There are flaws in the play, with a Hitler inseparably joined to Charlie Chaplin and an inarticulate Jewish intellectual as Halder's friend (given a smilingly numb portrayal by Joe Blythe), but the fault drops away in the light of Alan Howard's performance as Halder.

Thrusting banks of interrogation lights (designed by Uitz) keep the entire company of performers and musicians illuminated as Halder's private and political lives are exposed to scrutiny. The investigation is unexpectedly endowed with wit, harrowing in the circumstances, as Halder agrees to burn his beloved books and justifies each corrupting step into the maelstrom.

Having caught the Nazis' eyes with a novel favouring euthanasia, sprung from his frustration with his mother's senility, he becomes a Nazi theorist. Privately, he is haunted by an imaginary band playing music which elevates the personal conflicts. Mr Howard responds physically to the music, dividing himself balletically into the good servant who justifies each corrupting step into the maelstrom. He is a perfectly exposed soul that Mr Howard offers in a performance of great honesty. Everything seems so reasonable and chilling when he is finally welcomed by a live band as a high official at the death camp of Auschwitz.

Ned Chaillet

Philharmonia/Previn

Festival Hall/Radio 3

Michael Berkeley has cultivated a colourful orchestral hybrid from plainchant roots in his Gregorian Variations, commissioned by Du Maurier for the Philharmonia Orchestra and given its premiere performance at the start of last Thursday's concert. They are variations not on a theme but on a style, the quotations from more than one plainchant being so diversified in rhythm, harmony and instrumentation by the resources of a symphony orchestra that a tone poem of a sort emerges.

Its varied episodes range from solemnity to syncopated swing, and from Copland to Mahler in certain associations of mood and character: prairie prospect to tavern waltz. However, there is also an individual personality developing in Berkeley's music which shows itself here in the unexpected twist of phrase or harmony just when the conventional ear is expecting some sustained development. There were moments when this had a swiftness and patchwork effect, but that may have been a matter of Andre Previn's conducting.

He also had some difference of musical purpose with which blenched the Four Last Songs by Richard Strauss just when the soprano was finding the sense of their phrasing. She was the first I have heard to read them from the score during performance, but whether from the idea of security or memory I could not say. What it did mean was a hindrance to close identification with the mood of each of the songs, which accordingly lost much of their rapture and not a little of their vocal beauty.

Concerts

Margaret Price

The orchestra, whose leader, Christopher Warren-Green, phrased his gently curving solo in the third song, "Beim Schlafengehen", with a rare sensibility of expression, was as alert to subtleties of shading in this music as they were in the wider and more varied range of A London Symphony after the interval. Despite conducting often confined to marking the obvious, and which had difficulty in getting a straightforward, synchronized chord in several places, the playing held Vaughan Williams's music in affection.

It was a performance that made less of the music's pictorial associations with the metropolis than others have done, but which felt the musical character no less expressively. For all its variations, it is music that still repays attention with enjoyment: for its majesty, its human sympathy, its cheerful good humour, and because a poet's ear for the still, small voice of nature is what we hear it no less clearly.

Noël Goodwin

London Handel Orchestra/Darlow

St George's, Hanover Square

It was enterprising to conclude this year's London Handel Festival with L'Allegro, il Penseroso ed il Moderato, the oratorio which Handel wrote in 1740 based on two poems by Milton and one, specially written for it, by Charles Jennens. Mindful of music's fleeting nature, Handel intermingled Milton's lines rather than setting each poem separately. Whether he was wise to add the final part, which reconciles the two moods by way of a moving duet, is a matter he himself debated. Some of his own later revivals did away with it.

In the simple alternation of moods which makes up the first two parts, Handel kept interest alive by using more than one singer for each of the three roles, a necessary device if the oratorio is to be made. Every aria, too, is fresh, sometimes startlingly original, always melodiously rewarding. Thus, for example, in Part I, L'Allegro, sung coolly by Gillian Fisher, was accompanied by Roy Goodman's lavishly embellished solo, which was also representing a lark, and Il Penseroso (Emma Kirkby) followed with Liza Benozisk's flute enchantingly portraying Philomel, the nightingale.

Perhaps it was the sheer quality of her singing which seemed to elevate Miss Kirkby's music above the rest. True, she sounded overstressed in the terrifying coloratura of "But O! sad virgin", but where she was able to luxuriate in her melancholy she was peerless. In that nightingale aria, she floated the most sumptuous yet delicately controlled high A I have heard for a long time. Rogers Covey-Crump's contribution was also distinguished, and the other singers, Judith Rees, Margaret Cable and Stephen Varcoe, were all eminently adequate.

The chorus were small in both number and tone, occasionally flat, but always rhythmically alive in their relatively modest contributions. Denys Darlow conducted the London Handel Orchestra in a competent style, generally reflected by the playing.

Stephen Pettitt

Dance in London . . . and in Denmark

Les Riches

Covent Garden

With all three principals new to their roles in last Thursday's performance of Les Riches, the greatest transformation was in the rag mazarurka. The previous week we saw the hostess played inconspicuously as a young Sandra Cockerly know better. In her reading, the lady is absolutely on top of things. She enjoys her pearls, her leather headress, her cigarette in its long holder. She is delighted to be surrounded in her own home by so many pretty young things of all sexes.

When the two young men come in and find her, she does not deny herself a smug look at their muscular bare legs, but by the time they approach her she is scrupulously looking the other way. She can afford to take her time; she knows very well that they are going to sing dutifully, and perhaps beautifully, for their supper.

If only the other dancers had such grasp of their roles. Ravenna Tucker, who must be far the youngest dancer to play the servant in the blue coat, moves beautifully, her feet picking their way delicately across the floor; but she needs time and help to catch the role's sexual ambiguities, or its seductiveness.

Wayne Eagling makes a sensible shot at the leading beach boy; it is not his fault that English training leaves male dancers ill-prepared for such exposed, staccato solos. Lopsided turns in the air took the edge off his otherwise tough dancing, and all three men have to shuffle into position after their landings instead of coming down cleanly.

Eagling also danced well in Shadowplay, getting more securely into his new role there. The evening was completed by The Rite of Spring, better played than the Poulenc and Koechlin pieces, but unfortunately that is not saying much by concert standards.

When new, 20 years ago, the atomic imagery in Kenneth MacMillan's choreography (visible, alas, only from the cheaper seats upstairs) and in Sidney Nolan's designs made this production suit the mood of the time. MacMillan's fidgety choreography, all waving arms and bums, with jerky or shuffling steps, nowadays seems to live in a different world from Stravinsky's powerful music. Only Monica Mason's solos, near the end, as the chosen maiden, encourage a suspension of disbelief by their forcefulness.

John Percival

Kingdom of the Pagodas

Royal Theatre, Copenhagen

Quite a few British choreographers have mounted works for the Royal Danish Ballet since it first came out of its seclusion in 1954: Ashton, Cranko, Dolin, MacMillan, Rodgers, Tudor and (for The Sleeping Beauty) de Valois. Now Christopher Bruce and Richard Alston have joined that list; but, of them all, only Ashton with Romeo and Juliet in 1955 had created a ballet specially for Copenhagen until Alston made his new work, just premiered, Dances from the Kingdom of the Pagodas.

The title, less unwieldy in Danish (Danse fra Pagodernes rige), tells it all: Alston has turned to the marvellous score which Britten wrote for John Cranko, and which has been shamefully neglected since, but he has taken only the splendid diversions from the last act of the original work and has used it for a plotless ballet.

Surprisingly, with the ringing fanfare that commands attention, the curtain rises on a stage apparently too cluttered to allow much dancing. Antony McDonald's setting is ingenious: three structures like the tiered roofs of pagodas, mounted on a frame and separated by long banners. Most of the frame lifts, like a deckchair opening, to make a low ceiling for the opening dance, then higher again to provide a shining background to the main scene.

Rhapsodic: Lis Jeppesen and Bjarne Hecht

McDonald has dressed the cast in colourful clothes with slight suggestions of oriental men and women alike wear tight trousers; they have sashes around their waists, sleeves and high collars to their jackets, and the women wear skirts too. The band which each woman wears around her head also has a faintly eastern effect, but half the young women in Copenhagen are wearing such headbands too, so the look of the dancers is exotic without being bizarre.

Alston's choreography starts with a prelude which gradually brings on all the cast. Their evolutions are solemn and slightly mysterious. Thereafter, the mood becomes joyous, ending in a more serious but still very affirmative finale for which the leading couple put on what might be coronation or wedding robes, while all the others pay them homage.

That, and a tender quality in the duet for a younger couple of soloists, is the nearest the ballet comes to any specific emotional content, but Kingdom of the Pagodas proves satisfying as well as stirring. It is a fine example of how pure dance, reinforced by good music, can exhilarate by its sheer physical display and, at the same time, create its own imaginative mood.

The leads were to have been danced by Mette Henningsen and Arne Villumsen, but an injured knee kept Henningsen out of the premiere, her place being ably taken by Annemarie Dybal. Their duets and solos come mainly in the first half of the ballet, to music originally used by soloists, pairs or trios from the Pas de six cast (Alston uses a sextet among his dancers but makes them less prominent than Cranko did).

The original Pas de deux music goes to the younger couple, who are introduced simply as part of a group of dancers for the gavotte and become separated from the others almost like an afterthought. Once they have the stage to themselves, however, their duet has a meltingly rhapsodic quality which Lis Jeppesen and Bjarne Hecht make the most of. They are regarded as two of the most gifted among the younger Danish dancers, with justification.

This is the first time that Alston has worked with a classical ballet company, but for some time his choreography has been edging in a more classical direction, and he makes the transition with flying colours. The women dance on point, the men use the range of virtuosity available in ballet, and the result is exhilarating.

Kingdom of the Pagodas is a great stride forward for Alston, showing that he can work on a scale and in a style he has not tackled before. How odd that it should need a foreign company to spot his potential and take the risk; and how sad that so enjoyable a work, to the only score written by Britten exclusively for dancing, should not be in a British repertory. Peter Ernst Lassen conducted with sympathetic care.

John Percival

ONE OF THE GREAT COMIC CREATIONS OF OUR TIME MUNCH

SIMON CALLOW PATRICK RYECART

J.P. DONLEVY'S BALTHAZAR

DUKE OF YORK'S THEATRE

BOOK AHEAD: SAVE £££'S! BUY TICKETS AT LEAST 2 WEEKS AHEAD FOR ANY FUTURE PERFORMANCES (NOT SATURDAY) AND SAVE £2.50 ON BEST SEATS HURRY SENSATIONAL OFFER CLOSES SOON!

ACCOUNT DAYS: Dealings Began, April 19. Dealings End, April 29. Contango Day, April 30. Settlement Day, May 10.
 § Forward bargains are permitted on two previous days.
 (Current market price multiplied by the number of shares in issue for the stock quoted)

ACCOUNT DAYS: Dealings Began, April 19. Dealings End, April 29. Contango Day, April 30. Settlement Day, May 10.
 § Forward bargains are permitted on two previous days.
 (Current market price multiplied by the number of shares in issue for the stock quoted)

Interest Division
Strike Builders recovery
Video
THE
BLU
LONDON EXC ECONOMIC DIAR
OTHER EXC

BUSINESS NEWS

Interest rates gloom

Interest rates could rise sharply if the latest developments in the south Atlantic lead to a run on sterling. Without the Falklands shadow, interest rates would almost certainly have continued downward, providing a further cut in bank base rates. Ironically, there could be additional help for United Kingdom interest rates now from the United States after the better than expected money supply figures released last Friday.

Division over IMF role

Western industrial nations are seriously divided over the amount of financial muscle that the International Monetary Fund should be given to deficit nations in the event of a Pan's meeting of the IMF in the near future. A United States called for the IMF to return to being a true lender of last resort. Other nations wanted an increase in quotas, in order to boost the funds lending capacity.

Strike over Redpath sale

Workers at Redpath Dorman Long, British Steel's structural engineering subsidiary, are to stage a one-day strike today in protest at the BSC's decision to sell the company for £10m to Trafalgar House. Senior management from RDP who are members of the Steel Industry Management Association and are working out an employee buy-out scheme, will be complaining to the Office of Fair Trading that the sale is against the public interest.

Builders see recovery signs

British builders are noticing the first tentative signs of a modest recovery according to the National Federation of Building Trades Employers' annual report. The report says that the early months of 1982 have brought signs not only that the decline in national output was bottoming out, but also, that interest rates were on a firm downward path.

Video trials

British Telecom today begins engineering trials of an international video conferencing service. BT will use the European Orbital Test Satellite to send video messages to the French and Italian telecommunications authorities. A full trial of the service with business customers is expected this year.

THE WEEK AHEAD
Blue Circle boost

LONDON EXCHANGE

FT Index 567.1
FT 100 67.61
FT All Share 326.70
Bargains 15,415
Friday's close

Blue Circle shares have been a weak market in recent months but should pick up when the cement group reports a significant upturn in profits during 1981 with results due on Wednesday.

There should be a modest advance at Tarmac with tomorrow's final, but among the building contractors Geo. Wimpey, the largest group in the sector, is likely to reflect the depressed state of the construction industry with its figures on Thursday.

In the first half of 1981 Blue Circle saw United Kingdom profits fall by 19 per cent, despite a cement volume fall of 20 per cent, but overseas earnings climbed 154 per cent due to a particularly strong performance in Chile. With associates' profits up 49 per cent this produced a 75 per cent advance in pretax profits to £50.9m.

Low volume sales of cement in the United Kingdom and a declining rate of price increases will continue to be offset by

ECONOMIC VIEW

News of British military action in the South Atlantic yesterday could well hit the pound when financial markets open today, forcing the authorities to decide whether to use Britain's reserves on a big scale to support the currency or to jack up interest rates, with the damaging consequences that may have on industry.

With all eyes on the Falklands, economic news this week will inevitably be of secondary interest. Out today are figures for industrial investment for the fourth quarter of last year, which will reveal how much pension funds and others were investing overseas. On Tuesday come the April unemployment figures.

These could show a small fall from the March total of 2.99 million because of seasonal factors. Figures for strikes and total employment are published by the Department of Employment on Wednesday.

DIARY

Today: EEC finance ministers meeting, Brussels.
Tomorrow: "Think British" conference, Regent Crest Hotel, London.
Wednesday: British Rail annual report. Mr Norman Tabbutt, Employment Secretary, addresses Prime League, Caxton Hall, London. Overseas travel and tourism figures (January/February).
Thursday: Energy trends figures. Friday: Wales TUC conference opens. Llandudno. Car and commercial vehicle production figures (March).

OTHER EXCHANGES

Tokyo: Nikkei Dow Jones Index 7,333.94
Hong Kong: Hang Seng Index 1,235.84

Setback for nuclear power plans

By Michael Priest

New Central Electricity Generating Board forecasts of United Kingdom power demand to the end of the century are so low as to challenge the need for major additions to generating capacity over the next two decades. The figures are particularly damaging to the case for a large nuclear construction programme. The forecasts, which will be published next month, conclude that on the most optimistic assumptions for economic growth, electricity demand will expand by an average of 2 per cent a year. This is less than half the average increase during the 1970's.

At the opposite end of the CEB's range of five forecasts is the assumption of a static or shrinking economy, which would mean contraction in electricity demand. The midrange forecast that demand will go up by about 1 per cent a year is likely to be used by the Electricity Council's medium-term development plan. The plan is published annually in June and looks seven years ahead.

These projections of low demands come at a tricky time for the CEB, which is preparing evidence for the inquiry next January into the construction of the Sizewell B nuclear power station in Suffolk. Whatever the outcome of the inquiry, the new evidence is likely to shift some emphasis from how much capacity is needed to the merits of different kinds of power. The high construction costs of nuclear stations could count decisively.

MPs favour Budget procedure reforms

By Our Economics Staff

The influential Treasury Select Committee of MPs is about to come down firmly in favour of publishing a draft Budget, containing proposals on both tax and public spending, in December each year. This radical reform of Budget procedure would enable MPs to discuss proposals before the Chancellor presented his final Budget to Parliament in the spring.

The Select Committee meets today to discuss its draft report on the subject, and the final version is likely to be published early in June. The report follows recommendations made two years ago by an independent committee chaired by the late Lord Armstrong under the aegis of the Institute for Fiscal Studies.

Criticism of the way in which Budget decisions are made and presented has been growing in recent years. These criticisms have focused chiefly on the secrecy surrounding Budget preparations and the separation

Pioneers Co-operative in merger plan

By Derek Harris, Commercial Editor

The Rochdale-based Pioneers Co-operative Society, promoters of the Co-op movement, will disappear after 138 years trading, under a merger plan.

The decision lies with the members of the Pioneers and the Stockport-based Northwest Society. Boards of both societies are recommending the merger which would create a £120m turnover society putting it among the top half dozen in the movement. The historic link would not be completely severed: the new society would be called the Northwest Pioneers.

The planned merger is yet another commentary on the fortunes of about 170 cooperative retail societies. The movement has seen its market share depleted in recent years because of the rise in popularity of supermarkets.

Recession has also hit the Pioneers in the same way as it has many other societies. Though a marginal 1980 loss was due to a slight profit in 1981, the turnover which has since been restricted by problems at Oldham.

The Pioneers, which has two other new supermarkets, is taking the merger path earlier than other faltering societies. Mr Rodney Aspray, Northwest's chief executive who would take over the running of the new society with the impending retirement of the Pioneers' chief executive, Mr Keith Smith, foresees development which a smaller society would have found hard to tackle.

Cambridge Group remains pessimistic

Forecast of 4.5m jobless

By Frances Williams

A grim prospect for the 1980s of continued economic stagnation, mounting unemployment and growing social division between those in and out of work is forecast by the Cambridge Economic Policy Group headed by Professor Wynne Godley in its latest review published today.

Unemployment could rise to 4.5 million by the end of the decade on present policies, the group fears, while North Sea oil finances higher living standards for those still in work. Economic growth is likely to average only 1 per cent a year over the 1980s, compared with the 3 per cent necessary to start bringing unemployment down.

But the review is also deeply pessimistic about the prospects for alternative economic policies, including the imposition of import barriers, which the Cambridge Group favours.

Talks with Gulf Oil at crucial stage
Kuwait set to buy European refineries

By Jonathan Davis, Energy Correspondent

Gulf Oil, one of the world's largest oil companies, is pressing ahead with negotiations to sell the bulk of its European refining and marketing business to Kuwait. The negotiations, which would involve the sale of at least 75 per cent of the company's European downstream oil activities to Kuwait's state oil corporation, are believed to be at a crucial stage, even though the two sides have still to agree on the issue of price.

The talks, which were publicly acknowledged earlier this year by Gulf after months of speculation, were called off at one stage.

The deal, which would probably be worth about £1,000m, would be an important development in the history of the oil industry.

It would involve one of the world's leading oil companies pulling out of one of the main world markets in direct response to the chronic problem of refinery overcapacity, which has cost most oil companies millions of pounds in losses over the last two years.

It would also lead to a further step in the leading Middle East oil producers' attempt to extend their operations from production to supply and distribution.

Gulf has refining and marketing interests in several European countries, including Britain, Switzerland, Italy, The Netherlands and Denmark. Its share of the oil products market ranges from about 3 per cent in Britain to nearly 10 per cent in Denmark. The European industry as a whole is suffering from 40 per cent over capacity.

In its 1981 annual report, just published, Gulf discloses that it has already sold a third of its European assets since 1977, raising $200 million (about £135m). Disposal include its operations in France, Spain, Norway, northern Sweden and north-eastern England.

The company says its refineries in Europe operated at 46 per cent of capacity last year, compared with 62 per cent the year before. This years capacity is expected to be pared by more than 40 per cent, allowing it to raise its refinery utilization rate to about 80 per cent.

Mr James E. Lee, Gulf chairman, says that the company has decided to pursue two main strategies, including concentrating on building up its North American oil and gas reserves and cutting costs on its unprofitable downstream activities. It is not clear whether the group's British operations, which include a refinery at Milford Haven, in South Wales are included in the planned deal with the Kuwaitis, but the Kuwaitis would like to acquire them.

Mr Hutchcraft said the corporation's strategy for the Top CBI advisors named

By Our Industrial Staff

Sir Raymond Pennock, president of the Confederation of British Industry, today published for the first time the full list of members of the organization's powerful coordinating body, the president's committee.

The 31-member committee, which includes Sir Michael Edwards, chairman of B.I., and Mr John Harvey-Jones, new chairman of I.C.I., is the result of two years' work by Sir Raymond to extend its range and influence. One of the committee's principal tasks is to advise the president on the implementation of CBI policies and prepare the way for meetings with government ministers.

Sir Raymond said one of his objectives as president had been to ensure that CBI representatives were of the highest calibre and the committee now comprised some of the most outstanding businessmen in the land.

The committee, which meets each month and occasionally in emergency session, was established in 1976 after recommendations of the Partridge-Plowden report on the CBI's aims and organisation. Sir Raymond, who retires from the presidency next month, said the 1982 committee's work had been invaluable.

The chairman of other CBI committees: Sir John Read (finance and general purposes); Mr Ronnie Utiger (economic and financial policy); Mr Astley Whitall (employment policy); Sir Asquith Pearce (industrial policy); Mr Derek Kingsbury (overseas); Mr John Raisman (Europe); Mr George Duncan (companies); Sir Richard Cave (unemployment steering group); and Mr Jeremy Pope (smaller firms).

The chairman of companies are: Sir Michael Paravas (B.I.); Sir Arnold Hall (Hawker Siddeley); Mr John Harvey-Jones (ICI); Mr Emmanuel Kaye (Lansing Bagnall); Sir Alex Jarratt (Reed International); Sir David Orr (Unilever); Mr Derek Bell (Bass); Sir Kenneth Corfield (STC); Lord Robens (Johnson Matthey); Mr Peter Walters (BP); and Sir John Sainsbury (Sainsbury's).

Sir Raymond Pennock, 'outstanding businessman'.

Second aluminium plant at risk

By Edward Townsend, Industrial Correspondent

Another British aluminium smelter, the 112,000 tonnes a year Anglesey Aluminium plant, will be in jeopardy and 1,000 jobs put at risk if its United States owners are unable to negotiate a cheap power contract within the next few months.

Aluminium and Chemical Corporation, the California-based group which has a two-thirds stake in the smelter, has given the clearest hint yet that it regards high electricity prices as the main threat to the plant's future.

"The power agreement for Anglesey, in Wales, if left alone, will trigger much higher power costs in the future and this must be resolved," Mr Steve Hutchcraft, Kaiser's vice president and general manager in charge of aluminium, said in New York.

Closure of Anglesey Aluminium after British Aluminium's decision to shut its Invergoron smelter in the Scottish Highlands would wipe out two thirds of the country's aluminium producing capability leaving only Alcan's 120,000 tonnes a year plant at Lynemouth in Northumberland.

Government ministers are aware that if Anglesey collapsed Britain would once again become a net importer of aluminium which, because of its aerospace and defence equipment applications is regarded by many countries as a matter of strategic importance.

Mr Hutchcraft said the corporation's strategy for the Interior of the plant, threatened by high power costs.

Although closure is not an immediate prospect for Anglesey, Kaiser must now be considering a review of its holding in the company (the other third is held by Rio Tinto Zinc) if, as seems likely, an agreement to hold down power charges is not reached with the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr Hutchcraft said the corporation's strategy for the

HAWKER SIDDELEY GROUP

1981 RESULTS

	1981 £m	1980 £m
Sales	1,395	1,205
Trading profit	127.5	110.8
Profit before tax	121.1	113.0
Profit after tax & minority interests	79.3	69.6
Earnings per ordinary share	40.1	35.2
Dividends per ordinary share
First Interim	3.7p	3.0p
Recommended Final	5.6p	5.2p

The 1981 Report will be published in late May 1982, when copies will be available from the Secretary.

HAWKER SIDDELEY GROUP PLC
18 St James's Square, London SW1Y 4LJ.

McKechnie Brothers

The improvement in our trading profit compared with the corresponding period last year was due mainly to an excellent first half from New Zealand and to better results from the U.K., with the exception of the Chemicals Division where trading conditions continue to be very difficult. Good performances were also recorded by most of our associates overseas but the South African stock holding operations (in which we now have a reduced share) felt the effects of a levelling off in activity. We do not expect any rapid changes in the U.K. where we hope to maintain a slow advance sufficient to counteract any effects of a slackening of demand overseas.

Dr. J. M. Butler, Chairman

Interim Results - unaudited	Half-year ended 31st January	Year ended 31st July
	1982	1981
Sales	£'000	£'000
Operating Profit	73,510	60,353
Share of Profits of Associates	3,459	2,247
Net Profit	2,838	3,251
Extraordinary items	3,174	3,171
Ordinary Dividend	1,135	—
Earnings per Ordinary Share	995	991
	6.2p	6.3p

Notes:—(1) Interim dividend of 2.00p (1981 2.00p) per Ordinary Share making a gross equivalent of (2.85714p (1981 2.85714p)).
(2) The appreciation on metal stocks not covered by sales contracts, and not taken into account in this Statement, amounts to £183,000 after taxation. Any adjustment required at 31st July, 1982 will be dealt with as usual by transfer to or from Stock Reserve.
(3) Extraordinary items relate principally to a surplus arising on reorganisation of South African associates on 1st July, 1981.

McKechnie Brothers plc ALDRIDGE, WALSALL WS9 8DS

MARKETS ROUND-UP

Wall St rally as inflation falls

The stock market continued to rally last week, climbing to 862.16 to reach a 12-week high. The Dow Jones Industrial Average rose 18.74 points for the week, all these gains coming on Thursday and Friday.

Trading was touched off by the announcement on Friday morning that the consumer price index for March dropped 0.3 per cent, the first monthly decline since August 1981. When inflation drops, it is believed that interest rates will follow, making stocks a better investment than fixed income security.

The rally marked the sixth week in a row that the Dow had advanced, the first time since autumn 1972 that the market has risen in so many consecutive weeks. The market hit a 23-month low on March 8 when the Dow sank to 795.47.

The recovery has been led by energy stocks, strengthened by the firming of oil prices. Technology, drug and utility issues also gained. Most trading was done by large institutions. On Friday advances outnumbered declines by 1,042 to 456 and 1,318 blocks of 10,000 or more shares were traded. This number of trades is topped only by those in January 1981, when Joseph Granville, a prominent market advisor, told his clients to sell.

Forecasts are that the rally will continue to the end of the summer.

JOHANNESBURG

Brewery guide

A guide to the fortunes of South African Breweries, is expected this week when two of its major subsidiaries, Amstel, the furniture, clothing and shoe retailer, and OK Bazaars, the country's biggest department store chain, published their results. Satisfactory increases in earnings are expected in both cases, even though South Africa's Economic Boom is over and some experts are predicting recession by 1983.

Thus the market is anticipating that SAB's overall results will be good, particularly in its beer division — there is a shortage of it in the Johannesburg area after a strike by brewery workers although Southern Sun, the hotel chain, is producing some problems.

Meanwhile, the market has been digesting the March quarter gold mine quarterlies which have contained the expected shocks, or worse in some cases. Gencor Mines showed a big drop in earnings and in the JCI Group, Western Areas revealed that its breakeven price is $372. Randfontein, however, which some analysts feel has been underpriced, produced better than expected results. Anglo American's Orange Free State mines performed as well as could be expected, the market believes, and among its Transvaal mines, Elandsrand looked quite good after moving into better grade areas. Anglovaal's Harties and ET Cons were hit by big earnings drops. Another shock result was Anamint, with an interim dividend of 440 cents (630 cents) making a final of 700 cents (890).

HONGKONG

Sudden boost

The market broke its dull trading rising 53 points on higher turnover. The Hang Seng index closed at 1236 HK$82m (about £24m) sharply up on Monday's very poor HK$82m (£7.66m). The major boost was the speculation that property magnate Li Ka Shing has secured a US$200m (about £12m) loan, first appearing in the market late on Tuesday, the reports prompted overnight buying in London.

Most brokers wonder what Li wants to do with the extra cash, when his quoted vehicle, Cheung Kong, already has HK$2,000m (£186.91m) cash on book.

One theory is that this might mark the long awaited takeover of Hutchinson Whampoa, of which Cheung Kong already holds more than 40 per cent. Whatever the speculation the market was ripe for a rally in the light of a stronger Wall Street.

MALAYSIA

Poll buoyancy

The Malaysian elections which returned some leading Chinese businessmen to victory, buoyed the Malaysian Holdings listed on the Singapore exchange, including Mui, Multi-purpose Holdings, Bandar Raya and Malaysian Resources.

The market finished the week with a close of 763.72, a marginal gain of only 0.52 on the previous day but a 20.03 gain on the previous week's closing figure.

The announcement last week that on June 1, the controversial "immediate delivery trading rules," will be lifted was welcomed by all, especially foreign based broking houses who now have enough time to effect foreign deliveries.

FRANKFURT

War-weary

West German stock markets have decided to shake off worries about war in the South Atlantic — for the time being at least.

The Commerzbank index posted a useful gain of around 10 points last week as investors drew encouragement from falling capital market interest rates and began to hope for signs of an economic revival in Germany. Technical factors played a part in the upturn. Institutional selling the previous week on worries about the Falklands and the Middle East had reduced the amount of stock overhanging the market so that a revival of buying interest was rewarded with an upsurge of prices.

New York stock exchange: 12-week high

Higher oil prices helped the engineering and construction sectors which had been neglected in recent weeks on fears that lucrative Opec orders would soon be a thing of the past. The rally in gold prices also gave some support to Degussa, the German gold smelter, which had warned of a possible dividend cut this year.

Even though the Bundesbank decided to keep its special lombard rate at 9.5 per cent, stores, banks and motors — all of which can be expected to profit from lower interest rates — attracted buyers.

Argentine crude oil production fell 2.6 per cent in March to 15.11 million barrels compared with a year earlier. Production in the first quarter totalled 43.89 million barrels, compared with 45.05 million barrels in the same 1981 period.

Renault will lay off 3,500 workers at its car plant in Buenos Aires for the whole of next week. Volkswagen has sacked 500 workers and laid off another 1,200 while Ford will lay off 2,500 for five out of the next 15 days. These moves follow a further sharp drop in sales last month and this month.

CAPITAL MARKETS

Swiss broking action baffles gold market

Swiss banks and gold have always been synonymous. But the Swiss no longer dominate the gold market, not even the mystery-shrouded Russian gold business. While this has been a gradual process, the international gold trading community was amazed on Friday by a new Swiss move in the market which seemed to indicate that the Zurich banks have lost their way.

The three Zurich gold pool banks — Union Bank of Switzerland, Swiss Bank Corporation and Credit Suisse — are to set up a precious metals brokerage company with a registered office in Zurich.

Unless they have some deeply hidden and clever plan that none of us can understand, we just cannot fathom what they are up to. How can a brokerage company help them to bring up all sorts of conflict of interest between brokers and principals. In London the lines are clearly defined, whereas, here, customers are going to be wary of doing business if Hongkong's expansion in the gold market started the pressure on the Swiss banks. That was followed by the growth of business in New York and the recovery of confidence in London (which had originally been lost in the quarrel with South Africa). The London gold futures market, which opened last week, may also stimulate more bullion trading in London.

Swiss banks have traditionally been "long" of gold. In the great crash, as gold came tumbling down from $850, the banks and their customers lost a lot of money, as they were caught with large stocks and positions. Heads rolled, investment and trading strategies became very conservative, and the younger traders left to go to the thriving new centres. Zurich was no longer competitive.

What the Swiss need to do, sat dealers in the other centres, is appoint new top managers and given them greater freedom to trade and give advice. It is no good merely starting offices in the new centres — New York, Hong Kong and London are all areas in which the Swiss banks have opened for business. The criticism is that the staff are either not allowed to develop, or just do not have the flair to pull back lost business in Russia, the Middle East and South Africa.

Zurich believed its supremacy was damaged by a turnover tax on physical transactions — a Swiss specialization in the bullion market — about two years ago. The Swiss authorities' decision to exempt central bank transactions, taken a few months ago, was seen as a sign of their growing concern at the loss of gold business.

Mr Hubert Baschnagel, Swiss Bank Corporation director said the new brokerage firm, which will open later this summer, will be in a position to quote very narrow prices. But it will not be in the gold futures market.

Sally White

SUN ALLIANCE INSURANCE GROUP

Comments by the Chairman - Lord Aldington

We have to report a large underwriting loss. Despite this our total profit before tax amounted to £70.9m compared with £69.3m in 1980 and, after tax and minority interests, net earnings were 84.8p per share compared with 83.6p per share in the previous year.

I referred last year to the deteriorating underwriting conditions in most parts of the world. Indeed, this deterioration has continued and in some places intensified. The buoyancy of investment income has been taken by some to be a proper compensation for underwriting losses. High interest rates consequent upon high and continuing inflation certainly go some way to meeting the higher cost of claims caused by the same inflation. But they do not go the whole way and in our opinion an insurance company like Sun Alliance & London must continue to set itself a target of an underwriting profit in normal times.

The truth is that it is not only the increased costs and prices consequent upon inflation or the reluctance of people to increase sums insured in line with inflation which have caused the underwriting losses. All over the world new risks are being underwritten at rates which allow nothing for the inevitable uncertainty of their eventual cost.

Furthermore, claims in many established classes of insurance are much higher than were expected and judicial awards of compensation for personal injury have grown enormously. In many countries the incidence of arson, criminal damage and burglary has increased greatly. In these circumstances it is madness for underwriters to compete with each other for business at inadequate rates of premium. Moreover, at times of recession as now, the amount of business on offer is not expanding and in some areas is decreasing. The excessive capacity in the market to which I have referred before presents responsible underwriters with a serious challenge: the maintenance of a share of the market cannot be secured without accepting too low rates of premium. But those who are seeking to increase their share of the market at such times by driving the rates of premium catastrophically downwards are, I believe, causing enormous damage to the market, the insuring public and, of course, themselves.

The continuing deterioration in the reinsurance market is a matter of great concern to the entire world-wide insurance community. Increasingly, the credibility of a growing part of the excessive reinsurance capacity is being questioned and there are serious doubts whether, in the event of a major catastrophe, some claims by ceding insurers upon reinsurers would be met.

Operations

Against this background our own results, although disappointing to us, might have been worse.

Much of our international business was unprofitable with considerable underwriting losses in Canada and the U.S.A. and, for the second year, disastrous losses in Australia. Reinsurance business also deteriorated markedly.

Against this, our home business improved, helped by the mild winter of 1980/1981 and also by releases from outstanding loss reserves in the liability classes relating to earlier years. Just before Christmas, however, this improvement largely disappeared when severe winter weather cost us some £4.4m in the U.K. alone.

The 1979 Marine and Aviation year now closed was unprofitable and the subsequent open years are not running as well as we should like. Nevertheless, our reserves in the Fund remain adequate and no transfer from Profit and Loss Account was needed.

Our Life Division has again produced a larger surplus. Their reorganisation and vigorous marketing has steadily improved their share of the market in recent years. In 1981 the unit-linked funds showed outstanding investment results.

Investment income in the general funds increased encouragingly from £81.5m to £101.1m, a rate of growth of 24% or, eliminating the effects of exchange movements, 18%.

In addition, there was a further increase in the general funds in the surplus of market over book values of our investments with a rise of £60m to £390m. This gain is not reflected in our Profit and Loss Account.

Dividend

The Directors have resolved to declare a total dividend of 43p per share — an increase of 30.3% over that paid for 1980. An interim dividend of 19.5p per share was paid in January last and the final dividend of 23.5p will be paid on 5th July next.

The increased dividend leaves some £20.6m to be retained in the business and our solvency margin at 92% provides a springboard for expansion when we see profitable opportunities.

During many of these last ten years dividend restraint has been in force but your Board has always been keenly conscious of the effect of inflation on the shareholders' income. Despite somewhat disappointing results we are pleased to be able, for the third successive year, to declare increased dividends that more than match the year's rate of inflation and thus restore to shareholders in real terms the dividend level paid in earlier years.

Outlook

Looking ahead, we do not expect that the excessive competition in insurance markets will be eliminated in the near future. Nor can we expect a sharp increase in world economic activity in 1982. The difficulties in the insurance market we have seen overseas in the past few years have already spread into the United Kingdom. We shall certainly continue to do our best to discourage severe rate cutting and we have taken steps to reduce escalating expenses by a major reorganisation of our home business started in the middle of 1981.

No one can be unmindful of the very bad weather which we had in January following that in December to which I have already referred. The claims on us from the January weather are proving considerably more costly than those in December, but as a result of the steps we have taken in the last few years to strengthen our Personal account we are in a much better position to face the year. Other steps we have taken at home and overseas will strengthen our defences against the difficult conditions throughout our market.

The problems which confront us and insurers generally are serious and sometimes daunting — a real test of management's nerve and skill.

Summary of Results

	1981 £m	1980 £m
Premium Income
General Insurance	703.6	599.2
Long-term Insurance	173.3	143.3
	876.9	742.5
General Insurance Underwriting Result	(36.8)	(18.4)
Long-term Insurance Profits	6.1	5.4
Investment Income	101.1	81.5
Other Income	0.5	0.8
Profit before Taxation	70.9	69.3
Taxation	28.7	27.8
Profit after Taxation	42.2	41.5
Minority Interests	0.4	0.3
Profit attributable to Shareholders	41.8	41.2
Dividend	21.2	16.3
Profit Retained	20.6	24.9
Earnings per Share	84.8p	83.6p
Dividend per Share	43.0p	33.0p

The Annual General Meeting of Sun Alliance and London Insurance plc will be held on 26th May, 1982 at the Head Office, Bartholomew Lane, London EC2N 2AB.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr Anthony Metherell has been appointed chairman of James Walker Goldsmith & Silversmith. Due to ill health Mr Gerald Sanders has retired as chairman but remains a director.

The new production director of Horsell Graphic Industries is Mr Christopher Phillips.

Mr John Eggar has been appointed as a non-executive director of JCB Sales. Mr Eggar is chairman and chief executive of Jaguar Cars.

Mr Leslie Randall is appointed general manager of Usher-Walker and has been elected to the board.

Mr Sidney Marks has been elected president of M.Y. Dart. Mr Paul Marks has been appointed chairman in place of Mr Marks, who will remain a non-executive director of the company.

Brostrom Cargo (UK) has Mr Ron Corderoy deputy managing director. He continues as administration manager of the Brostrom (UK) group of companies including Brostrom Cargo (UK), Neptun and Travel Lloyd.

STICK THIS ON YOUR WINDSCREEN AND READ IT EVERY TIME YOU PAY THE PETROL ATTENDANT

I'VE JUST SPENT
£10 ON PETROL
I NEED ONLY
HAVE SPENT £7
ON LP GAS.

Just now you could have saved £3.
By filling up with LP Gas at around £3 a gallon.
Your local Dual-Fuel Systems LP Gas conversion specialist can have your car or commercial vehicle back on the road in a day ready to give you the choice of LP Gas or petrol. At the flick of a switch.
Wouldn't you like to part with less money for a change?
Dual-Fuel Systems is Britain's No. 1 LP Gas conversion specialist.
Ring today for your free copy of our comprehensive brochure and the address of your nearest conversion centre.

See us on Stand 37 at the Fleet Motor Show, Wembley
TELEPHONE: 01450 9911
HEAD OFFICE, UNIT 5, 1000 NORTH CIRCULAR ROAD, LONDON NW2 2P

Clares introduce two new and revolutionary Claretainer Roll Pallets

See the drapes off on Stand 161 SHD Exhibition, Haris Court, London, TODAY
Or phone Brian Atwood 0749-73688
Clares Limited, Parkwood Estate, Wetherby, West Yorkshire LS17 7JH
26th-30th April 1982

The Times
Classified Advertising
Ring 01-837 3311

BUSINESS NEWS/FOCUS AND COMMENT

INTERNATIONAL

How a'Court caught the City on the hop

ARGENTINA
The New York Federal Reserve's supply of $100 notes to banks has doubled, mostly for transport to Argentina. Peso deposits in Argentine banks have fallen about 5 per cent since the country seized the Falkland Islands and these would normally be exchanged for dollars by depositors. But the Government banned sales of foreign currency and gold on the day the Falklands were taken.

UNITED STATES
The current oil glut should not fall on western countries under a false sense of security, Mr Dennis O'Brien, deputy assistant secretary for international affairs at the energy department, said.

JAPAN
Toray Industries is to produce and market polyethylene terephthalate in France under a joint agreement with Societe Nationale Elf Aquitaine. The concern will be 35 per cent owned by Toray and 65 per cent by the French partner.

NORWAY
Norway has decided to open six new blocks off its northern shores for oil exploration.

It is never easy for a financial community whose rules of behaviour are based on years of experience to accept that an outsider has surprised them with a new way of making a takeover bid.

But Australian lawyer Robert Holmes a'Court's "two-tier takeover", which has effectively won control of Associated Communications Corporation, has caught the City unawares. And the feeling is that it will never be allowed to happen again.

His double-decker offer is a simple idea. The tempting top deck is pitched at a sufficiently high price to scare off any rivals, but with it go conditions rarely met in any takeover battle. If the number of acceptances fall short of these conditions within a specified time, then shareholders are left holding the less attractive lower deck, which because counter-bidders had been scared off is the price they would be likely to receive for their shares.

Few are carping about the precise terms of Mr Holmes a'Court's offer. He is likely to pay the higher 110p a share price rather than the 95p offered on the lower tier. But that may be because the takeover panel insisted they a fortnight's notice be given before the 110p offer was closed and because of the high number of professional investors holding ACC shares who understand the complexities of offer documents. What is exercising the minds of the merchant bankers — who earn their fees thinking up bright new ideas on how to attack and defend in bid battles — is the potential danger of the two-tier offer.

Philip Robinson examines the controversial "two-tier" bid for Associated Communications Corporation and predicts that it is unlikely to be allowed to happen again.

Their objections stem from the premise that the City code on takeovers and mergers is being broken in spirit. It was set up 14 years ago to stop preferential treatment for shareholders to bring order to bids, and to make as simple as possible the decision whether to accept or reject a bid.

But the crucial point of any two-tier offer is at what point the higher price ceases to be available. Had the panel not imposed the need for 14 days' notice of it being withdrawn in the ACC battle, Mr Holmes a'Court could have ended up paying 95p a share.

If his pattern is followed, for the higher of two prices to be paid in a bid, holders of 90 per cent of the shares must accept by the first closing date — normally 21 days after the posting of the offer document. It is extremely rare for the 90 per cent to be attained in that time. Professional investors are renowned for waiting almost to the last minute before they accept.

Had the 14-day rule not been there, Mr Holmes a'Court could have stated that the offer had not been met and, with the more than 50 per cent of acceptances which he had at that time, declared himself the new owner at the 95p level.

In approving which first bid the panel, which first defined the higher price as being in the same class as a cash alternative, later changed its mind and viewed it as an "alternative offer". This appears to be another precedent.

The two-tier bid also does not seem to bear examination when rule 35 of the code is applied. That says that when an offer fails to become unconditional in all respects within the offer period or is withdrawn, no further bid or share-buying shall be made within 12 months of the final closing date.

In circumstances where the higher offer fails, to give the bidder the chance of a second bite of the cherry immediately, it would appear to infringe this section of the code.

Mr Holmes a'Court's intention with ACC was quite clear. He said he did not mind whether he got all the shares, or just enough to win control. He could have achieved that with one simple offer, even stripping out the added complication of ACC's two classes of shares.

Going a' courting: How Robert Holmes a'Court wooed ACC shareholders

Instead, with panel approval, he chose a two-tier offer which worked as a shut-out bid, which the panel and the City's ultimate

Enabond prices (yields and premiums)

Price	Yield	Conv	Price
101.1	14.09	102.1	7.62
101.2	14.09	102.2	7.62
101.3	14.09	102.3	7.62
101.4	14.09	102.4	7.62
101.5	14.09	102.5	7.62
101.6	14.09	102.6	7.62
101.7	14.09	102.7	7.62
101.8	14.09	102.8	7.62
101.9	14.09	102.9	7.62
102.0	14.09	103.0	7.62
102.1	14.09	103.1	7.62
102.2	14.09	103.2	7.62
102.3	14.09	103.3	7.62
102.4	14.09	103.4	7.62
102.5	14.09	103.5	7.62
102.6	14.09	103.6	7.62
102.7	14.09	103.7	7.62
102.8	14.09	103.8	7.62
102.9	14.09	103.9	7.62
103.0	14.09	104.0	7.62

Business Editor Latin America: bankers' dilemma

Whatever the outcome of the Falklands crisis, much damage will have been done to the Argentine economy and its already shaky standing in the eyes of international bankers. The episode has thrown off course the attempts by Economy Minister Dr Roberto Alemann to tackle Argentina's 130 per cent inflation rate by chopping back government borrowing and thus the need to print money. The stability of the present junta must also be in doubt and, with it, the will to make the painful readjustments necessary for the economy.

Some Latin American economies such as Brazil have, with varying success, been tackling their problems, and well before the Falklands crisis bankers were beginning to show their concern with tighter terms and higher spreads for Latin American borrowers. However, the uncertainty caused by the combination of Argentine military action and British economic sanctions — designed to restrict new credit to Argentina while allowing cash to flow freely out of the country — has been enough to cut off virtually all external credit to Argentina. There are signs that the ability of other Latin American borrowers to raise credit has also been harmed.

Estimated external debt $000m

	1979	1981
Argentina	19.0	32.0
Brazil	54.0	70.0
Chile	8.5	15.5
Mexico	40.3	65.0
Ecuador	3.6	5.0
Peru	7.2	8.3

The dangers of this soon become apparent when borrowers need to roll-over loans or raise fresh ones just to service their debts. Argentina, Brazil and Mexico between them have an estimated gross borrowing requirement of about $52,000m this year. Even this excludes short-term credits normally rolled-over as a matter of course.

To some extent, bankers were already beginning to draw in their horns before the latest crisis erupted. After a period of rapid growth in the 1970s Latin American countries have been falling victim to the impact of world recession, falling commodity prices and painfully high real interest rates. In Argentina, for instance, GDP fell in real terms by 10.5 per cent in 1979 followed by a 1 per cent drop in 1980 and a 6.5 per cent fall last year.

In Brazil growth rates of 6.7 per cent in 1979 and 7.9 per cent in 1980 gave way to a 3.5 per cent fall in 1981. The first decline since the 1930s — while Mexico, which still managed an 8.1 per cent rise in GDP in 1981, may see the rate of growth halved this year.

Declining levels of investment in Latin America will also harm growth prospects; inflation remains uncomfortably high in most of the major economies and expert growth was eased, as external borrowings have continued to increase.

Lending by nine largest US banks (as % of capital at June 1981)

	$000m	% of capital
Brazil	11.5	49
Mexico	12.6	54
S. Korea	7.5	32
Argentina	5.7	24
Philippines	3.8	16
Taiwan	4.7	20
Sub-total	45.7	195
All non-oil developing countries	64.7	276

Base Lending Rates

	13%
ABN Bank	13%
Barclays	13%
BCCI	13%
Consolidated Crds	13%
C. Hoare & Co.	13%
Lloyds Bank	13%
Midland Bank	13%
Nat Westminster	13%
TSB	13%
Williams & Glyn's	13%

WEEKLY LIST OF FIXED-INTEREST STOCKS

Stock	Price	Yield
Admiral	101.1	14.09
Admiral	101.2	14.09
Admiral	101.3	14.09
Admiral	101.4	14.09
Admiral	101.5	14.09
Admiral	101.6	14.09
Admiral	101.7	14.09
Admiral	101.8	14.09
Admiral	101.9	14.09
Admiral	102.0	14.09
Admiral	102.1	14.09
Admiral	102.2	14.09
Admiral	102.3	14.09
Admiral	102.4	14.09
Admiral	102.5	14.09
Admiral	102.6	14.09
Admiral	102.7	14.09
Admiral	102.8	14.09
Admiral	102.9	14.09
Admiral	103.0	14.09

Slough Estates predicts a brighter future

Pre-Tax Profits increase 17.8%
Earnings per Share increase 17.0%
Dividends increase 20.0%

For the year ended 31st December 1981, Slough Estates plc increased pre-tax profits by 17.8% from £11,431,000 to £13,467,000 including a profit of £852,000 on the realisation of an investment in Bank America Realty Investors.

This figure was achieved during a year marked by the continuation of the very severe recession and of the high interest rates that have affected the demand for premises in all markets.

The United Kingdom
In the U.K. some 270,000 sq ft of new industrial floor space was constructed — a lower figure than in recent years reflecting the state of the market.

New construction has largely been concentrated in the South of England where demand has remained more buoyant than in other parts of the country.

The group holds an inventory of 79 acres of land for future development. Much of this is located in the South East of England and West along the M4 and it is expected that these locations will continue to attract new investment.

The major modernisation of the power station has been completed and from the been completed with 37% of the accommodation leased.

The Canadian company has had another good year with profits rising by 25%. The 54,000 sq ft office development at Markham is complete and 75% occupied. An additional fifteen acres of land in Toronto has been acquired.

In the United States, the Riverview Plaza is now fully open. The major office project at 33 West Monroe Street, Chicago is complete and full rental income will benefit the group in 1982.

Finance
The group ended the year with £11.5m of cash and with adequate banking facilities available for the current development programme and for the acquisition of new projects.

Prospects
Many aspects of the recession are still with us; despite this there are some positive signs of improvement. The group is represented in locations that will continue to out-perform the average and is well placed to respond to better conditions in the future.

We have the land resources, the expertise and the financial strength. For 1982 improved rental income is expected in the U.K. from reviews, reversions and new projects. Overseas prospects are also improving thanks amongst other things to the leasing of the Brussels office block.

I am confident that subject to no unforeseen circumstances arising we will be reporting a significant rise in pre-tax profits and anticipate increasing the effective distribution by 25%.

NIGEL MOBBES
Chairman.

SLOUGH ESTATES

Helping Britain get back to work

NESTLÉ S.A.,
Cham and Vevey (Switzerland)

THE 115TH ORDINARY GENERAL MEETING OF SHAREHOLDERS is to be held at 3.00 p.m. on Thursday, 13th May 1982, at the "Palais de Beaulieu" LAUSANNE (SWITZERLAND)

AGENDA

1. Approval of the Accounts for 1981 and the Annual Report.
2. Release from responsibility of the Board of Directors and of the Management.
3. Decision regarding the appropriation of the net profit.
4. Elections in accordance with the Articles of Association.

The owners of bearer shares may obtain their cards giving admission to the general meeting (with a proxy) at the Company's Transfer Office in Cham on Monday 10th May 1982 at noon, at the latest. The cards will be delivered against the statement of a bank that the shares are deposited or upon deposit of the shares in the offices of the Company where they will remain blocked until the day after the general meeting.

The report Nestlé 1981 with the Annual Report of Nestlé S.A. (comprising the Balance Sheet and the Profit and Loss Account with comments, the Auditors' Report and the proposals for the appropriation of profits), is available to the holders of bearer shares as from 29th April, 1982, at the Registered Offices at Cham and Vevey, and as from 3rd May at the Offices of the Paying Agents of the Company.

The holders of registered shares whose names are entered in the Share Register will, within the next few days, receive at their last address communicated to the Company an envelope containing the Notice for the General Meeting, together with a form comprising an application for obtaining the card giving admission to such meeting as well as a proxy. On the other hand, the aforesaid Report will be dispatched a few days later.

The shareholders are requested to address any correspondence concerning the General Meeting to the Transfer Office of the Company at Cham (Switzerland).

The Board of Directors
Cham and Vevey,
26th April 1982

REPUBLIC OF GUINEA-BISSAU
PORT OF BISSAU

The Government of Guinea-Bissau requested credits and loans from the World Bank, the Kuwait Fund, the OPEC Fund, the Arab Bank for Economic Development of Africa and other co-financiers to finance a port project at Bissau. The proposed project is expected to include:

1. Construction of a new deep water berth of reinforced concrete deck and piles.
2. Repair of the existing commercial berth of reinforced concrete deck and piles.
3. Rehabilitation of five river ports.
4. Provision and installation of navigation aids; and
5. Construction of a building for port apartments and offices in Bissau.

The tender documents are being prepared by the consultants, NEDECO, Amersfoort, PO Box 85, The Netherlands, and are expected to be ready for tendering in July 1982. Contractors with adequate experience in constructing and repairing similar works may send a copy of their prequalification document in English or French to the following address:

The Director General of Transport,
Ministry of Transport and Tourism,
PO Box 306,
Bissau,
Republic of Guinea-Bissau.

Prequalification documents should reach the above address before 12 noon on Friday May 28 1982, and should include adequate information on the contractor's nationality, address, telephone and telex numbers, commercial registration, previous experience in port construction and repair, available equipment, financial position and curricula vitae of main staff. Since the repair of the existing reinforced concrete commercial berth is an integral part of the project, unless the contractor is experienced in such repair work, he should associate with another experienced firm to carry out this work. In such case, the prequalification documents for this firm should be attached to those of the main contractor.

The GRA Group plc
(Registered Number 226267 England)

Share Capital

	Ordinary Shares	Issued and fully paid
Authorised	£2,500,000	£2,142,626 of 5p each

Application has been made to the Council of The Stock Exchange for the issued ordinary shares of the Company to be re-admitted to the Official List. Dealings are expected to commence on the 30th April, 1982. Particulars of the shares are available in the Extel Statistical Service and copies may be obtained during business hours on any weekday (Saturdays and public holidays excepted) up to and including 7th May, 1982, from:

Baring Brothers & Co., Limited, 8 Bishopsgate, London EC2N 4AE
Rowe & Pitman, City Gate House, 39/45 Finsbury Square, London EC2A 1JA

M. J. H. Nightingale & Co. Limited
27/28 Lowest London EC3R 8EB Telephone 01-621 1212

The Over-the-Counter Market

Company	Change	Price	Dividend	P/E Ratio
1293 Asa Ind Ltd	130	2.2	10.0	7.7
4226 Airpro Group	73	4.7	6.4	11.6
1168 Airtronic & Rhodes	44	4.3	9.8	3.7
12720 Bardon Hill	200	2.2	9.7	9.7
1338 CCL 11% Conv Pref	107	1.1	15.7	14.7
4798 Debenhams Services	62	1.1	6.0	5.0
4111 Frank Horell	76	1.1	6.4	8.4
10379 Frederick Parker	54	1.1	6.4	8.4
356 George Blair	96	1.1	7.3	7.6
2516 Isis Conv Pref	109	1.1	15.7	14.4
2905 Jackson Group	99	2.2	7.0	7.1
15336 James Burroughs	113	1.1	8.7	7.7
2489 Robert Jenkins	64	1.1	5.3	5.3
2485 Scruttons "A"	153	1.1	10.7	6.7
3881 Twicken Old	134	1.1	15.0	18.8
2184 Twicken 15% ULS	80	1.1	3.0	12.0
3815 Unifac Holdings	25	1.1	6.4	6.4
10124 Walter Alexander	231	1.1	14.5	6.3
5391 W. S. Yates	231	1.1	14.5	6.3

Prices now available on Prestel, page 48146

Boycott forgotten as Ferraris shine in two-car duel

From John Blunsden, Imola, Italy, April 25

It only took two cars to make a motor race. This was the case in the Ferrari Grand Prix, which was the only race in the world where the two cars were the same.

During the 60-lap San Marino Grand Prix, Pirelli's two Ferraris, driven by Gilles Villeneuve and Didier Pironi, delivered a superb performance here this afternoon.

Having seen the second of the two Ferraris in action during the 60-lap San Marino Grand Prix, Pirelli's two Ferraris, driven by Gilles Villeneuve and Didier Pironi, delivered a superb performance here this afternoon.

In the end, the prize went to Pironi, much to the annoyance of Villeneuve who had taken the lead on the penultimate lap. He must have felt that he had done enough to take the winner's laurels.

Several laps earlier, the Ferrari team had held out the "Ferrari" signal. They feared that their men, who were having to cope with deteriorating tyres and brakes, might see each other off and hand the victory to the Tyrrell of Michele Alboreto, which was nearly a minute behind them at that stage.

Only 14 cars began the race following a boycott by the majority of teams from the British-based Formula One Constructors' Association. They were protesting at the disqualification from the Brazilian Grand Prix of Nelson Piquet and Keke Rosberg. It followed protests by Ferrari and Renault that water storage tanks on the two drivers' cars helped them sidestep the 55kg minimum weight ruling.

But for a Ferrari driver in front of his home crowd, too much was at stake to let go lightly. Pironi carved his way past his team partner at the last realistic corner for overtaking. There was insufficient track remaining for Villeneuve to deliver his reply.

The crowd loved it. It was only far that they should be able to cheer an Italian victory, for in terms of a 96-minute motor racing spectacle they had been badly short-changed. In the end they had a lot to be happy about.

Ferrari's first and second, an Italian driver third, another Italian car (Jean-Pierre Jarier's Osella) fourth, and another Italian driver, Teo Fabi, seventh, all last in the Toleman behind the ATS-Ford of Eliseo Salazar and Manfred Winkelhock. The last three all had to make pit stops along the way.

It was Arnoux's Renault, which started in pole position, which set the early pace. It held a narrow lead over the two Ferraris until lap 27 when Villeneuve squeezed by. But four laps later, Arnoux regained the lead and remained there until his leaking engine oil ignited spectacularly. His team colleague, Alain Prost, currently the provisional leader before he retired at the pits with engine trouble. There was a wretched luck for the two British drivers in the race. Derek Warwick's Toleman retired on the warm-up with an elusive electrical failure, later traced to a faulty battery, and Brian Henton's Tyrrell broke its transmission as it left the starting line. However, the ability of Alboreto, Tyrrell's team leader, to keep well within one second each lap of the leaders for much of the race underlined again both his own growing stature and the improving calibre of his car. It was a pity that much of the goodwill this team had attracted by coming to Imola, to please their Italian sponsor and the crowd, was dissipated overnight by a furious protest by Ken Tyrrell against all the turbo-charged cars including the British Tolemans. He argued that they were in breach of the regulations which only permit mechanically driven superchargers, not exhaust-aided turbo-chargers. As turbo-chargers have been raced for several seasons, it was no surprise that the protest was rejected. With both Alfa Romeos retiring early the field was reduced to only eight cars before half distance. RESULTS: 1. D. Pironi (Ferrari), 60 laps 1 hour 36 minutes 36.887 seconds — 116.63 mph; 2. G. Villeneuve (Ferrari), 1 hour 36 minutes 39.253 seconds; 3. M. Alboreto (Tyrrell-Ford), 1 hour 37 minutes 46.571 seconds; 4. J. P. Jarier (Osella-Ford), 59 laps; 5. E. Salazar (ATS-Ford), 57 laps; 6. T. Fabi (Toleman-Ford), 52 laps (unclassified). WORLD PLACINGS: Drivers — 1. Prost 18 pts; 2. Lauda 12; 3. Alboreto and Pironi 10; 5. Rosberg and Watson 8; 7. Nunnemann and Villeneuve 6; 9. Patrese, Mansell and Arnoux 4; 12. Larrier 3; 13. Salazar, Winkelhock and De Angelis 2. Constructors — 1. Renault 22; 2. McLaren-Ford 20; 3. Ferrari 18; 4. Williams-Ford 14; 5. Tyrrell-Ford 10; 6. Lotus-Ford 8; 7. ATS-Ford and Brabham-Ford 4; 8. Osella-Ford 3.

MOTOR RACING

Pironi in a Ferrari leads a depleted field to win the San Marino Grand Prix

MOD. PENTATHLON

Britain foil Soviets with late burst

By Michael Coleman

Exceptionally strong running and swimming on the last days by Richard Phelps, Stephen Sowerby and Michael Mumford enabled Britain to snatch fourth place from the Soviet Union in the Rome international which concluded yesterday.

Phelps climbed to 10th individual place, only 15 points behind Daniele Masala, the Italian hope when the world championships are held in Rome in October.

Both Sowerby and Mumford amassed 5,135 points in what had proved a tough contest between 16 countries. Considering the absence of Danny Nightingale, who is taking exams, the British team total of 15,574 points is immensely encouraging.

Phelps, in particular, must be satisfied with this workout. As a junior he will lead Britain at the world junior championships in London in August and he has met the best seniors during the last five days in Italy.

It was the world champion, Janusz Prizick-Peczek, of Poland, who finally emerged as individual victor with 5,473 points, from Doinbatorov, of the Soviet Union, (5,385) and the West German's new strong man, Gunter Rehbein (5,381). Rehbein, a junior last year and world silver medal winner, is now out of Phelps' way.

INDIVIDUAL: 1. Prizick-Peczek (Poland) 5,473; 2. A. Doinbatorov (USSR) 5,385; 3. G. Rehbein (West Germany) 5,381; 4. R. Phelps (GB) 5,264; 5. S. Sowerby (GB) 5,135; 6. M. Mumford (GB) 5,135. TEAMS: 1. West Germany 15,534; 2. Italy 15,537; 3. Sweden 15,696; 4. GB 15,574; 5. Soviet Union 15,415.

GOLF

Ballesteros reclaims his Madrid crown

From John Hennessy
Golf Correspondent
Madrid, April 25

Severiano Ballesteros returned here this week to reclaim his Spanish crown. The winner of the Madrid Open championship two years ago, in the presence of the constitutional monarch, and defender last year, he had a final round today of 68, five under par, and a total of 273.

Ballesteros beat two competitors, Jose-Maria Canizares and Amador Canizares, by one stroke and two strokes respectively. Sam Torrance was the best of the British on 280, three shots behind Vicente Fernandez, of Argentina.

Ballesteros was a quintessential Ballesteros, a mixture of the brilliantly conventional and the outrageously unorthodox. There are no car parks flanking the Puerta de Hierro course, but Ballesteros' recovery shots from sand, trees and bushes that amounted almost to genius. He was two strokes behind Canizares, but he overhauled him on the second and passed him by the turn.

Sandy Lyle was his third playing companion, only one shot behind Ballesteros, but he destroyed his chances with a crushing eight at the long fifth, where he hooked wildly out of bounds, from three strokes behind Canizares, he had dropped to nine behind the leader by the turn.

The out-of-bounds at the fifth hole was a disaster for Lyle, who had been all of 60 yards off line. He then played a superb six-iron to six feet with his third ball but, his spirit no longer destroyed, he missed the putt.

A shot lost on either side reduced his position by five in three holes. With Torrance starting from the same position as Lyle, on 39, three over par, the tournament became an exclusively Spanish prerogative.

Within two holes, Ballesteros had eroded Canizares' lead with a chip-shot dead at the second to a bunker, the first Carrido in the match ahead, had also taken four at the first and so languished by three strokes, one behind Lyle. At the fifth, the scene of Lyle's agony Ballesteros missed the green but chipped dead for his second birdie.

Uncharacteristically, Ballesteros allowed a stroke to escape at the sixth short, where he came out of a bunker to six feet and failed, to a groan of universal dismay, with the putt.

At the seventh Ballesteros escaped from the trees and put a bunker shot to the very edge of the hole. At the eighth he blocked out his tee shot, played a difficult little pitch from 25 yards out and holed from five yards. At the next he extracted some compensation for a nearby six on Friday. His tee shot narrowly slipped at the fairway bunker that was to trap Lyle and from 100 yards out he pitched to 18 inches.

Up ahead Garrido, winner of the Tula Open a week before, achieved a superb eagle at that telling fifth hole and stole the expected birdie at the eighth, only 318 yards, but they were the final shots of his locker, and it was Canizares who mounted the final thrilling challenge with three birdies in five holes from the 13th. But Ballesteros answered the call of the worshiping boards by playing one last great bunker shot at the long 16th (536 yards) to match Canizares's five.

LEADING FINAL SCORES: 273: S. Ballesteros, 70, 68, 68, 67; J. Canizares, 70, 64, 69, 71; 272: A. Canizares, 67, 70, 69, 66; V. Fernandez (Argentina), 71, 71, 67, 69; S. Torrance (GB), 71, 68, 68, 74; 268: S. Lyle (GB), 71, 67, 71, 69; 267: S. Lyle (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 265: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 263: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 262: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 261: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 260: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 259: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 258: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 257: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 256: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 255: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 254: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 253: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 252: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 251: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 250: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 249: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 248: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 247: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 246: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 245: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 244: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 243: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 242: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 241: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 240: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 239: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 238: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 237: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 236: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 235: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 234: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 233: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 232: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 231: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 230: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 229: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 228: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 227: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 226: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 225: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 224: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 223: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 222: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 221: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 220: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 219: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 218: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 217: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 216: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 215: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 214: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 213: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 212: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 211: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 210: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 209: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 208: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 207: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 206: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 205: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 204: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 203: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 202: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 201: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 200: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 199: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 198: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 197: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 196: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 195: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 194: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 193: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 192: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 191: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 190: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 189: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 188: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 187: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 186: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 185: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 184: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 183: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 182: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 181: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 180: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 179: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 178: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 177: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 176: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 175: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 174: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 173: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 172: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 171: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 170: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 169: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 168: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 167: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 166: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 165: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 164: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 163: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 162: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 161: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 160: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 159: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 158: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 157: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 156: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 155: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 154: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 153: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 152: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 151: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 150: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 149: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 148: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 147: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 146: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 145: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 144: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 143: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 142: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 141: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 140: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 139: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 138: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 137: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 136: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 135: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 134: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 133: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 132: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 131: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 130: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 129: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 128: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 127: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 126: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 125: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 124: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 123: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 122: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 121: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 120: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 119: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 118: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 117: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 116: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 115: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 114: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 113: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 112: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 111: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 110: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 109: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 108: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 107: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 106: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 105: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 104: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 103: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 102: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 101: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 100: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 99: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 98: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 97: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 96: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 95: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 94: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 93: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 92: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 91: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 90: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 89: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 88: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 87: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 86: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 85: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 84: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 83: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 82: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 81: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 80: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 79: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 78: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 77: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 76: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 75: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 74: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 73: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 72: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 71: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 70: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 69: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 68: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 67: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 66: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 65: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 64: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 63: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 62: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 61: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 60: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 59: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 58: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 57: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 56: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 55: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 54: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 53: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 52: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 51: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 50: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 49: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 48: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 47: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 46: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 45: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 44: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 43: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 42: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 41: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 40: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 39: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 38: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 37: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 36: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 35: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 34: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 33: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 32: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 31: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 30: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 29: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 28: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 27: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 26: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 25: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 24: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 23: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 22: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 21: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 20: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 19: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 18: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 17: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 16: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 15: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 14: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 13: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 12: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 11: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 10: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 9: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 8: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 7: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 6: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 5: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 4: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 3: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 2: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75; 1: J. Amador (Canada), 70, 69, 70, 75.

Miss Aitken's ordeal

Winnie Aitken did well to finish three shots clear of Maureen Richmond, Belle Robertson and Alison Gemmill in the final round of the Helen Holman Trophy. She was five shots ahead of the field leaving Old Troon's 16th but caught the bunker short and right of the 16th, yet 17th. Her three round tally of 231 comprised scores of 75 and 72 over Troon's par of 144 and an 84 over the Open championship links.

Before she came to the 17th, Miss Aitken, who started the day nine shots ahead of Mrs Robertson, had played five times from sand. Her first bunker shot on the penultimate hole hit the bank and rolled back; her second, from a semi-patched lie, leapt into the air but came back on course more, this time finishing in footmarks. Now she looked for another club and another escape route. She came out sideways and, in a sportsmanlike gesture worthy of Jack Nicklaus himself, Mrs Robertson went across and said, quietly: "Well done... Now you can relax."

Miss Aitken succeeded in escaping from the ordeal with nothing worse than a five and duly hit two good shots to the back of the 18th to make her title — her third in this event — secure.

Mrs Richmond's last round of 74 was a considerable achievement for one who had a baby daughter less than five months ago.

SCORES: 231, W. Aitken (Old Troon) 75, 72, 84; 224, M. Richmond (Old Troon) 75, 74; 221, A. Gemmill (Old Troon) 75, 72, 74; 218, B. Robertson (Old Troon) 75, 72, 71; 215, S. Gemmill (Old Troon) 75, 72, 68; 212, S. Gemmill (Old Troon) 75, 72, 65; 209, S. Gemmill (Old Troon) 75, 72, 62; 206, S. Gemmill (Old Troon) 75, 72, 59; 203, S. Gemmill (Old Troon) 75, 72, 56; 200, S. Gemmill (Old Troon) 75, 72, 53; 19

SPORT AND RECREATION

BRITISH GRAND PRIX

Sunday 18th July

Regularly sold available with splendid views overlooking Brands Hatch circuit for up to 20 people. Large reception hall with bar and patio; full catering facilities available on request. Access to paddock and private car park included. Available for Grand Prix and two practice days on 16th and 17th July.

OFFERS WANTED

Telephone Mrs. Rudden 0892 26333

ANNOUNCEMENTS

IMPERIAL CANCER RESEARCH FUND

World Leaders in Cancer Research

Helping cancer patients at our special clinics today. The Imperial Cancer Research Fund is seeking a cure for cancer. We are looking for people who can help us. If you are interested, please contact us. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

CLUB ANNOUNCEMENTS

THE GOLFERS OF ST. JAMES'S. The club is looking for new members. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

YACHTS AND BOATS

EX-PASSENGER FERRY. Small motorboat for sale. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

UK HOLIDAYS

ROCK CORNWALL Holiday homes. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

MEMORIAL SERVICES

KEELBY. Memorial service for Mr. Keelby. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

IN MEMORIAM

LENNIE. In memory of Lennie. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

DISARM FOR DEVELOPMENT. Disarm for development. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

SHORT LETS

INSTANT FLATS. Instant flats for sale. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

HOLIDAYS AND VILLAS

SYDNEY 4245 Rm. Access Travel. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

EUROPEAN FLIGHTS

EUROPEAN FLIGHTS. European flights. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

HOT GRECE AT A COOL PRICE

HOT GRECE AT A COOL PRICE. Hot Greece at a cool price. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

SUMMER HOLIDAYS

SUMMER HOLIDAYS. Summer holidays. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

EUROPEAN FLIGHTS

EUROPEAN FLIGHTS. European flights. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

LUXURY VILLAS WITH POOLS

LUXURY VILLAS WITH POOLS. Luxury villas with pools. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

EUROPEAN FLIGHTS

EUROPEAN FLIGHTS. European flights. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

SPECIAL OFFERS

SPECIAL OFFERS. Special offers. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

TO ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES

TO ADVERTISE IN THE TIMES. To advertise in the Times. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

PRIVATE ADVERTISERS ONLY

PRIVATE ADVERTISERS ONLY. Private advertisers only. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES AND DEATHS

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES AND DEATHS. Births, marriages and deaths. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

PROPERTY, BUSINESS AND RENTALS (Trade only)

PROPERTY, BUSINESS AND RENTALS (Trade only). Property, business and rentals. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

APPOINTMENTS

APPOINTMENTS. Appointments. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

PERSONAL (Trade only)

PERSONAL (Trade only). Personal (trade only). We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

THE TIMES, News Newspapers Limited,

THE TIMES, News Newspapers Limited. The Times, News Newspapers Limited. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

P.O. Box No. 7, New Printing House Square,

P.O. Box No. 7, New Printing House Square. P.O. Box No. 7, New Printing House Square. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

Gray's Inn Road, London WC1X 8EZ.

Gray's Inn Road, London WC1X 8EZ. Gray's Inn Road, London WC1X 8EZ. We are looking for people who can help us. We are looking for people who can help us.

PERSONAL COLUMNS

HOLIDAYS AND VILLAS

GREEK ISLANDS FOR A SONG

LAST MINUTE SALE

2 WEEK INCLUSIVE VILLA HOLIDAYS AT LOW PRICES

ALL WEEKEND DEPARTURES

SPRINGS CORFU & CRETE

APRIL 1982

MAY 1982

JUNE 1982

ALSO FLIGHTS ONLY

AIRLINK

9 Wilton Road, London SW1V 1LL

Access B'card welcome ATOL 1188

SUNFARE BARGAINS

STOP PRESS! STOP PRESS! STOP PRESS!

FULLY INCLUSIVE HOLIDAYS—NO EXTRAS!

SPECIAL OFFER

BENITUS & MESSINGH Apr. 24th only

1 WEEK £135 inc. 2 WEEKS £135 inc.

COFAP Travels

21st May 22nd May 23rd May

Direct from London, Luton, Birmingham, Manchester and Glasgow.

SUNFARE HOLIDAYS

2 Golden Square, London W1 07A 2041

Birmingham: 021-633 4211 Manchester: 061-230 7900

Glasgow: 043-555 5585

ATOL 13188

TRIMFARMS TO EUROPE

SEAT SALES

MANAGERS/ATHENS

GATWICK/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

LONDON/ATHENS

FOR SALE

RESISTA CARPETS

London's largest carpet store

Vetvet pile Meridian broadloom full colour range at £3.99 a sq. yd.

15% VAT. Massive stocks of all types of carpet. Free delivery to London, Essex, Kent, Surrey

and Sussex. Tel. 01-876 0203

183 UPPER RICHMOND ROAD

WEST, SW14

Our service to your satisfaction

MARKSON'S

CHOPIN LIST

1. Hundreds of new and second hand pianos.

2. Pianos for hire with option to purchase.

3. Attractive payment schemes.

4. Specialist after sales service.

ALSO HARMONIC PIANOS

Albany St. NW1, 01-555 8682

Arbury Rd. SE18

OBTAINABLE. We obtain the best available, tickets for the London Grand National

at £10.00. Contact: Gordon

Little, 01-876 0203

SOUTHERN MUSIC CENTRE

100, Strand, London WC2R 0JH

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

JACQUES SAMUEL

PIANOS

London's largest selection of new and second hand pianos

at competitive prices.

Rehearsal and M. 1. 01-876 0203

BECHSTEIN HOUSE

142 EDGWARE ROAD, W2

01-223 8318

PIANOS: H. LANE & SONS, New and second hand pianos

at competitive prices.

Rehearsal and M. 1. 01-876 0203

THE PIANO WORKSHOP

100, Strand, London WC2R 0JH

COLLECTORS

THE BRITISH EMPIRE Catalogue of second hand books from

Wigan, Farnham, Slough, etc.

Tel. 01-876 0203

SERVICES

HYPOTHETICAL PSYCHOLOGY

1. Hypothetical psychology

2. Hypothetical psychology

3. Hypothetical psychology

4. Hypothetical psychology

5. Hypothetical psychology

6. Hypothetical psychology

7. Hypothetical psychology

8. Hypothetical psychology

9. Hypothetical psychology

10. Hypothetical psychology

11. Hypothetical psychology

12. Hypothetical psychology

13. Hypothetical psychology

14. Hypothetical psychology

15. Hypothetical psychology

16. Hypothetical psychology

17. Hypothetical psychology

18. Hypothetical psychology

19. Hypothetical psychology

20. Hypothetical psychology

21. Hypothetical psychology

22. Hypothetical psychology

23. Hypothetical psychology

24. Hypothetical psychology

25. Hypothetical psychology

26. Hypothetical psychology

27. Hypothetical psychology

28. Hypothetical psychology

29. Hypothetical psychology

30. Hypothetical psychology

31. Hypothetical psychology

32. Hypothetical psychology

33. Hypothetical psychology

34. Hypothetical psychology

35. Hypothetical psychology

36. Hypothetical psychology

37. Hypothetical psychology

38. Hypothetical psychology

39. Hypothetical psychology

40. Hypothetical psychology

41. Hypothetical psychology

42. Hypothetical psychology

43. Hypothetical psychology

44. Hypothetical psychology

45. Hypothetical psychology

46. Hypothetical psychology

47. Hypothetical psychology

48. Hypothetical psychology

49. Hypothetical psychology

50. Hypothetical psychology

51. Hypothetical psychology

52. Hypothetical psychology

53. Hypothetical psychology

RENTALS

CABAN & GASELEE

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

RENTALS

Today's television and radio programmes

Edited by Peter Dear

BBC 1

6.40 Open University: Gibbon the Ruins of Rome. 7.05 Maths Methods: Forecasting. 7.30 Science and the Visual Arts. 7.55 Close-up. 8.05 Junior Schools. 8.15 Job Satisfaction. 8.35 Junior Craft. Design and Technology. 10.00 You and Me. For the very young (not schools). 10.15 Music. 11.00 Merry-go-round. 11.20 News. 11.30 Close-up. 11.40 News Afternoon. 11.50 News. 12.30 News. 1.30 News. 1.45 Pigeon Street. A See-Saw programme for the very young (7). 2.01 For Schools. Colleges: Words and Pictures. 2.40 Industrial Archaeology. 3.00 Close-up. 3.15 Songs of Praise from Billerica, Essex (7). 3.53 Regional news (not London).

3.55 Play School. For the under fives (shown earlier on BBC 2). 4.20 Cheggers Plays Pop Fun and games plus five pop music from Madness and Bananarama. 4.45 Jane of the Jungle. Cartoon adventures of a South American Amazon (7). 5.05 John Craven's Newsworld. World news for young people. 5.10 This Peter the country's fastest tortoise, Maggie and Jim, make their spring debut after their winter hibernation. With them comes advice on tortoise care. 5.40 News with Richard Baker. 6.00 South East at Six. 6.25 Nationwide introduced by Frank Bough and Sue Lawley. 6.55 Triangle. The start of another twice-weekly drama series about a North Sea ferry company. The company has now gone public and one of the shareholders is the owner of a rival shipping company. 7.20 Bret Maverick. An unscrupulous author needs to write a story about a man who is not too keen on dying in the cause of literature. 8.10 Panorama. Mrs Thatcher is interviewed by Robert Kee and Richard Lindley.

9.00 News with John Humphrys. 9.25 Fanny Hill (1975) starring Burt Reynolds and Catherine Deneuve. A down and out honest detective forms a relationship with a dedicated call girl. They plan to leave their world of pimps and violence but before they can he becomes involved with a brutal murder. The plot and corruption that he uncovers during his investigations dramatically alters both their lives. It is the film's first showing on British television. 11.23 News headlines. 11.25 The Computer Programme. In the fifth of ten programmes about the world of information science Chris Searle, Ian McNaughton-Davis and Gill Nevill explore the New Media (7). 11.50 Weather.

Connie Booth as Ruth (BBC 2, 9.30pm)

Connie Booth certainly buries her Fanny Hill image in her role of Ruth Baker in THE STORY OF RUTH (BBC 2 9.30pm) a true-life psychiatric case history from the files of Dr Morton Schatzman. Adapted by Peter Fensholt, Ruth is a young American wife, living in London in 1977 with her husband and three children. Shortly after setting up home here she begins to have nightmares about and hallucinations of a still-living father who, when she was twelve, sexually assaulted her. Over a period of four or five months she gradually rejects her husband's advances and loses interest in her children. Husband Paul (Colin Bruce) comes to realise that she should seek psychiatric help. Dr Schatzman sends her to the Arbour Cris Centre (Agony 'all to the inmates) a singularly plain establishment in the suburbs with a

BBC 2

6.40 Open University: Maths Convergence. 7.05 Electric Money. 7.30 Computing. Sorting. 7.55 Close-up. 11.00 Play School. For the under fives presented by Floella Benjamin and Fred Harris. 11.25 Close-up.

5.10 A Song of Sirpence. How granta are awarded to two London literary circles and how they decide to use it (7). 5.40 Buck Rogers' starring Buster Crabbe. Agrees one and Buck and Buddy agree to help fight the thickest killer Kane. 6.00 Wales. Two separate episode and Gruffydd meets her Maker on New Year's morning. 6.25 The Saga of Noggie the Nog. 6.35 Fanny Hill. Fish keeping as a hobby. 7.00 Better Than New. Hints on renovating old furniture. Tonight David Day and Albert Jackson discuss the pros and cons of repairing surface damage. 7.25 News with subtitles. 7.30 A Family Band. Roy Castle visits the Owens of North Wales and the Nonnes of Worcester. 8.00 Barry Manilow in Britain. The second part of the popular singer's concert recorded at the Royal Albert Hall.

9.00 The Mike Harding Show. Another half-hour of jokes and songs from the little man in dungarees. Recorded at the Opera House, Bolton. 9.30 The Story of Ruth adapted by Peter Fensholt from an actual case study by Dr Morton Schatzman. Ruth is a young American wife, living in London in 1977 with her husband and three children. Shortly after setting up home here she begins to have nightmares about and hallucinations of a still-living father who, when she was twelve, sexually assaulted her. Over a period of four or five months she gradually rejects her husband's advances and loses interest in her children. Husband Paul (Colin Bruce) comes to realise that she should seek psychiatric help. Dr Schatzman sends her to the Arbour Cris Centre (Agony 'all to the inmates) a singularly plain establishment in the suburbs with a weird mixture of fellow 'guests'. Her hallucinations are harnessed to help her reject the nightmares and to manifest happy experiences instead. It is a somewhat frightening story of one woman's fight to overcome nightmare hallucinations. Starring Connie Booth as Ruth. 10.35 Cartoon Two: Fair Play. A Polish cartoon about manners in the world of combat. 10.45 Newsnight. The latest news from around the world plus an extended look at one of the major stories. Ends at 11.35.

ITV/LONDON

9.30 For Schools: John Gipsy's ride to York. 9.47 All about time. 10.04 Lambing in Yorkshire. 10.21 Victoria Wood. 10.48 For the hearing impaired. 11.05 Living with a handicapped child. 11.22 A Day in the Life of a Colours family. 11.38 The workings of a computer. 12.00 Cocklefish Bay. Adventures of the Cockle twins for the very young. 12.10 Rainbow. Learning with puppets. 12.30 Supersense. Don MacLeod with advice on saving on electrical repairs (7). 1.00 News with Peter Sissons. 1.20 Thames News. 1.30 Van der Valk. The Dutch detective investigates charges of corruption in high places (7). 2.30 Plans A Circle of Children (1977) starring Jane Alexander and Rachel Roberts. A young socialist tries of the good life and decides to devote herself to looking after emotionally disturbed children. But do the authorities want her?

4.15 Cartoon: Porky Pig. 4.20 The Scooby Show with Matthew Corbett (7). 4.45 Murphy's Mob. The final episode of the drama series about a football club. 5.15 Gambler. Married couples compete for cash prizes under the questioning of Fred Dimensio. 5.45 News. 6.00 Thames news. 6.25 Help introduced by Viv Taylor Gee. She talks to Fred Padley from the Reading branch of the Workers' Educational Association. 6.35 News. 6.45 News. 7.00 Nature Watch. Julian Pettifer with George Archibald on his Wisconsin farm. It is here that he works to preserve some fifteen species of crane threatened with extinction. He made news recently by catching in captivity the rare Siberian Crane. 7.30 Corporation Street. Ken Barlow is visited by the police. 8.00 Union Castle. Comedy series about a stately home bought by a union's pension fund. 8.30 World's Action. A film report on the role of the United Nations as honest broker in the Falklands crisis.

9.00 Minder: The Desert Song. Terry's Good. Another half-hour of jokes and songs from the little man in dungarees. Recorded at the Opera House, Bolton. 9.30 The Story of Ruth adapted by Peter Fensholt from an actual case study by Dr Morton Schatzman. Ruth is a young American wife, living in London in 1977 with her husband and three children. Shortly after setting up home here she begins to have nightmares about and hallucinations of a still-living father who, when she was twelve, sexually assaulted her. Over a period of four or five months she gradually rejects her husband's advances and loses interest in her children. Husband Paul (Colin Bruce) comes to realise that she should seek psychiatric help. Dr Schatzman sends her to the Arbour Cris Centre (Agony 'all to the inmates) a singularly plain establishment in the suburbs with a weird mixture of fellow 'guests'. Her hallucinations are harnessed to help her reject the nightmares and to manifest happy experiences instead. It is a somewhat frightening story of one woman's fight to overcome nightmare hallucinations. Starring Connie Booth as Ruth. 10.35 Cartoon Two: Fair Play. A Polish cartoon about manners in the world of combat. 10.45 Newsnight. The latest news from around the world plus an extended look at one of the major stories. Ends at 11.35.

Radio 4

6.00 News Briefing. 6.10 Farming Week. 6.30 Today. 6.45 Prayer for the Day. 7.00 Today's News. 7.20 News Headlines. 7.45 "Thought for the Day." 8.00 Today's News. 8.20 News Headlines. 8.35 The Week on 4. 8.45 Glyn Worsnip in the BBC. 8.57 Weather and Travel. 9.00 News. 9.05 Start the Week in Scotland. 9.20 News. 10.02 Money Box. 10.30 Daily Service. 10.48 See You Glasgow (new series) Roger McGough tours the City of Glasgow in the Radio 4

11.00 News Travel. 11.05 Down Your Way visits Counties. 11.48 Poetry Please. 12.00 News. 12.05 You and Yours. 12.27 Naked Radio 4 An award-winning Scottish comedy programme. 12.55 Weather and Travel. 1.00 The World at One. 1.05 News. 1.20 News. 1.25 News. 1.30 News. 1.35 News. 1.40 News. 1.45 News. 1.50 News. 1.55 News. 2.00 News. 2.05 News. 2.10 News. 2.15 News. 2.20 News. 2.25 News. 2.30 News. 2.35 News. 2.40 News. 2.45 News. 2.50 News. 2.55 News. 3.00 News. 3.05 News. 3.10 News. 3.15 News. 3.20 News. 3.25 News. 3.30 News. 3.35 News. 3.40 News. 3.45 News. 3.50 News. 3.55 News. 4.00 News. 4.05 News. 4.10 News. 4.15 News. 4.20 News. 4.25 News. 4.30 News. 4.35 News. 4.40 News. 4.45 News. 4.50 News. 4.55 News. 5.00 News. 5.05 News. 5.10 News. 5.15 News. 5.20 News. 5.25 News. 5.30 News. 5.35 News. 5.40 News. 5.45 News. 5.50 News. 5.55 News. 6.00 News. 6.05 News. 6.10 News. 6.15 News. 6.20 News. 6.25 News. 6.30 News. 6.35 News. 6.40 News. 6.45 News. 6.50 News. 6.55 News. 7.00 News. 7.05 News. 7.10 News. 7.15 News. 7.20 News. 7.25 News. 7.30 News. 7.35 News. 7.40 News. 7.45 News. 7.50 News. 7.55 News. 8.00 News. 8.05 News. 8.10 News. 8.15 News. 8.20 News. 8.25 News. 8.30 News. 8.35 News. 8.40 News. 8.45 News. 8.50 News. 8.55 News. 9.00 News. 9.05 News. 9.10 News. 9.15 News. 9.20 News. 9.25 News. 9.30 News. 9.35 News. 9.40 News. 9.45 News. 9.50 News. 9.55 News. 10.00 News. 10.05 News. 10.10 News. 10.15 News. 10.20 News. 10.25 News. 10.30 News. 10.35 News. 10.40 News. 10.45 News. 10.50 News. 10.55 News. 11.00 News. 11.05 News. 11.10 News. 11.15 News. 11.20 News. 11.25 News. 11.30 News. 11.35 News. 11.40 News. 11.45 News. 11.50 News. 11.55 News. 12.00 News. 12.05 News. 12.10 News. 12.15 News. 12.20 News. 12.25 News. 12.30 News. 12.35 News. 12.40 News. 12.45 News. 12.50 News. 12.55 News. 1.00 News. 1.05 News. 1.10 News. 1.15 News. 1.20 News. 1.25 News. 1.30 News. 1.35 News. 1.40 News. 1.45 News. 1.50 News. 1.55 News. 2.00 News. 2.05 News. 2.10 News. 2.15 News. 2.20 News. 2.25 News. 2.30 News. 2.35 News. 2.40 News. 2.45 News. 2.50 News. 2.55 News. 3.00 News. 3.05 News. 3.10 News. 3.15 News. 3.20 News. 3.25 News. 3.30 News. 3.35 News. 3.40 News. 3.45 News. 3.50 News. 3.55 News. 4.00 News. 4.05 News. 4.10 News. 4.15 News. 4.20 News. 4.25 News. 4.30 News. 4.35 News. 4.40 News. 4.45 News. 4.50 News. 4.55 News. 5.00 News. 5.05 News. 5.10 News. 5.15 News. 5.20 News. 5.25 News. 5.30 News. 5.35 News. 5.40 News. 5.45 News. 5.50 News. 5.55 News. 6.00 News. 6.05 News. 6.10 News. 6.15 News. 6.20 News. 6.25 News. 6.30 News. 6.35 News. 6.40 News. 6.45 News. 6.50 News. 6.55 News. 7.00 News. 7.05 News. 7.10 News. 7.15 News. 7.20 News. 7.25 News. 7.30 News. 7.35 News. 7.40 News. 7.45 News. 7.50 News. 7.55 News. 8.00 News. 8.05 News. 8.10 News. 8.15 News. 8.20 News. 8.25 News. 8.30 News. 8.35 News. 8.40 News. 8.45 News. 8.50 News. 8.55 News. 9.00 News. 9.05 News. 9.10 News. 9.15 News. 9.20 News. 9.25 News. 9.30 News. 9.35 News. 9.40 News. 9.45 News. 9.50 News. 9.55 News. 10.00 News. 10.05 News. 10.10 News. 10.15 News. 10.20 News. 10.25 News. 10.30 News. 10.35 News. 10.40 News. 10.45 News. 10.50 News. 10.55 News. 11.00 News. 11.05 News. 11.10 News. 11.15 News. 11.20 News. 11.25 News. 11.30 News. 11.35 News. 11.40 News. 11.45 News. 11.50 News. 11.55 News. 12.00 News. 12.05 News. 12.10 News. 12.15 News. 12.20 News. 12.25 News. 12.30 News. 12.35 News. 12.40 News. 12.45 News. 12.50 News. 12.55 News. 1.00 News. 1.05 News. 1.10 News. 1.15 News. 1.20 News. 1.25 News. 1.30 News. 1.35 News. 1.40 News. 1.45 News. 1.50 News. 1.55 News. 2.00 News. 2.05 News. 2.10 News. 2.15 News. 2.20 News. 2.25 News. 2.30 News. 2.35 News. 2.40 News. 2.45 News. 2.50 News. 2.55 News. 3.00 News. 3.05 News. 3.10 News. 3.15 News. 3.20 News. 3.25 News. 3.30 News. 3.35 News. 3.40 News. 3.45 News. 3.50 News. 3.55 News. 4.00 News. 4.05 News. 4.10 News. 4.15 News. 4.20 News. 4.25 News. 4.30 News. 4.35 News. 4.40 News. 4.45 News. 4.50 News. 4.55 News. 5.00 News. 5.05 News. 5.10 News. 5.15 News. 5.20 News. 5.25 News. 5.30 News. 5.35 News. 5.40 News. 5.45 News. 5.50 News. 5.55 News. 6.00 News. 6.05 News. 6.10 News. 6.15 News. 6.20 News. 6.25 News. 6.30 News. 6.35 News. 6.40 News. 6.45 News. 6.50 News. 6.55 News. 7.00 News. 7.05 News. 7.10 News. 7.15 News. 7.20 News. 7.25 News. 7.30 News. 7.35 News. 7.40 News. 7.45 News. 7.50 News. 7.55 News. 8.00 News. 8.05 News. 8.10 News. 8.15 News. 8.20 News. 8.25 News. 8.30 News. 8.35 News. 8.40 News. 8.45 News. 8.50 News. 8.55 News. 9.00 News. 9.05 News. 9.10 News. 9.15 News. 9.20 News. 9.25 News. 9.30 News. 9.35 News. 9.40 News. 9.45 News. 9.50 News. 9.55 News. 10.00 News. 10.05 News. 10.10 News. 10.15 News. 10.20 News. 10.25 News. 10.30 News. 10.35 News. 10.40 News. 10.45 News. 10.50 News. 10.55 News. 11.00 News. 11.05 News. 11.10 News. 11.15 News. 11.20 News. 11.25 News. 11.30 News. 11.35 News. 11.40 News. 11.45 News. 11.50 News. 11.55 News. 12.00 News. 12.05 News. 12.10 News. 12.15 News. 12.20 News. 12.25 News. 12.30 News. 12.35 News. 12.40 News. 12.45 News. 12.50 News. 12.55 News. 1.00 News. 1.05 News. 1.10 News. 1.15 News. 1.20 News. 1.25 News. 1.30 News. 1.35 News. 1.40 News. 1.45 News. 1.50 News. 1.55 News. 2.00 News. 2.05 News. 2.10 News. 2.15 News. 2.20 News. 2.25 News. 2.30 News. 2.35 News. 2.40 News. 2.45 News. 2.50 News. 2.55 News. 3.00 News. 3.05 News. 3.10 News. 3.15 News. 3.20 News. 3.25 News. 3.30 News. 3.35 News. 3.40 News. 3.45 News. 3.50 News. 3.55 News. 4.00 News. 4.05 News. 4.10 News. 4.15 News. 4.20 News. 4.25 News. 4.30 News. 4.35 News. 4.40 News. 4.45 News. 4.50 News. 4.55 News. 5.00 News. 5.05 News. 5.10 News. 5.15 News. 5.20 News. 5.25 News. 5.30 News. 5.35 News. 5.40 News. 5.45 News. 5.50 News. 5.55 News. 6.00 News. 6.05 News. 6.10 News. 6.15 News. 6.20 News. 6.25 News. 6.30 News. 6.35 News. 6.40 News. 6.45 News. 6.50 News. 6.55 News. 7.00 News. 7.05 News. 7.10 News. 7.15 News. 7.20 News. 7.25 News. 7.30 News. 7.35 News. 7.40 News. 7.45 News. 7.50 News. 7.55 News. 8.00 News. 8.05 News. 8.10 News. 8.15 News. 8.20 News. 8.25 News. 8.30 News. 8.35 News. 8.40 News. 8.45 News. 8.50 News. 8.55 News. 9.00 News. 9.05 News. 9.10 News. 9.15 News. 9.20 News. 9.25 News. 9.30 News. 9.35 News. 9.40 News. 9.45 News. 9.50 News. 9.55 News. 10.00 News. 10.05 News. 10.10 News. 10.15 News. 10.20 News. 10.25 News. 10.30 News. 10.35 News. 10.40 News. 10.45 News. 10.50 News. 10.55 News. 11.00 News. 11.05 News. 11.10 News. 11.15 News. 11.20 News. 11.25 News. 11.30 News. 11.35 News. 11.40 News. 11.45 News. 11.50 News. 11.55 News. 12.00 News. 12.05 News. 12.10 News. 12.15 News. 12.20 News. 12.25 News. 12.30 News. 12.35 News. 12.40 News. 12.45 News. 12.50 News. 12.55 News. 1.00 News. 1.05 News. 1.10 News. 1.15 News. 1.20 News. 1.25 News. 1.30 News. 1.35 News. 1.40 News. 1.45 News. 1.50 News. 1.55 News. 2.00 News. 2.05 News. 2.10 News. 2.15 News. 2.20 News. 2.25 News. 2.30 News. 2.35 News. 2.40 News. 2.45 News. 2.50 News. 2.55 News. 3.00 News. 3.05 News. 3.10 News. 3.15 News. 3.20 News. 3.25 News. 3.30 News. 3.35 News. 3.40 News. 3.45 News. 3.50 News. 3.55 News. 4.00 News. 4.05 News. 4.10 News. 4.15 News. 4.20 News. 4.25 News. 4.30 News. 4.35 News. 4.40 News. 4.45 News. 4.50 News. 4.55 News. 5.00 News. 5.05 News. 5.10 News. 5.15 News. 5.20 News. 5.25 News. 5.30 News. 5.35 News. 5.40 News. 5.45 News. 5.50 News. 5.55 News. 6.00 News. 6.05 News. 6.10 News. 6.15 News. 6.20 News. 6.25 News. 6.30 News. 6.35 News. 6.40 News. 6.45 News. 6.50 News. 6.55 News. 7.00 News. 7.05 News. 7.10 News. 7.15 News. 7.20 News. 7.25 News. 7.30 News. 7.35 News. 7.40 News. 7.45 News. 7.50 News. 7.55 News. 8.00 News. 8.05 News. 8.10 News. 8.15 News. 8.20 News. 8.25 News. 8.30 News. 8.35 News. 8.40 News. 8.45 News. 8.50 News. 8.55 News. 9.00 News. 9.05 News. 9.10 News. 9.15 News. 9.20 News. 9.25 News. 9.30 News. 9.35 News. 9.40 News. 9.45 News. 9.50 News. 9.55 News. 10.00 News. 10.05 News. 10.10 News. 10.15 News. 10.20 News. 10.25 News. 10.30 News. 10.35 News. 10.40 News. 10.45 News. 10.50 News. 10.55 News. 11.00 News. 11.05 News. 11.10 News. 11.15 News. 11.20 News. 11.25 News. 11.30 News. 11.35 News. 11.40 News. 11.45 News. 11.50 News. 11.55 News. 12.00 News. 12.05 News. 12.10 News. 12.15 News. 12.20 News. 12.25 News. 12.30 News. 12.35 News. 12.40 News. 12.45 News. 12.50 News. 12.55 News. 1.00 News. 1.05 News. 1.10 News. 1.15 News. 1.20 News. 1.25 News. 1.30 News. 1.35 News. 1.40 News. 1.45 News. 1.50 News. 1.55 News. 2.00 News. 2.05 News. 2.10 News. 2.15 News. 2.20 News. 2.25 News. 2.30 News. 2.35 News. 2.40 News. 2.45 News. 2.50 News. 2.55 News. 3.00 News. 3.05 News. 3.10 News. 3.15 News. 3.20 News. 3.25 News. 3.30 News. 3.35 News. 3.40 News. 3.45 News. 3.50 News. 3.55 News. 4.00 News. 4.05 News. 4.10 News. 4.15 News. 4.20 News. 4.25 News. 4.30 News. 4.35 News. 4.40 News. 4.45 News. 4.50 News. 4.55 News. 5.00 News. 5.05 News. 5.10 News. 5.15 News. 5.20 News. 5.25 News. 5.30 News. 5.35 News. 5.40 News. 5.45 News. 5.50 News. 5.55 News. 6.00 News. 6.05 News. 6.10 News. 6.15 News. 6.20 News. 6.25 News. 6.30 News. 6.35 News. 6.40 News. 6.45 News. 6.50 News. 6.55 News. 7.00 News. 7.05 News. 7.10 News. 7.15 News. 7.20 News. 7.25 News. 7.30 News. 7.35 News. 7.40 News. 7.45 News. 7.50 News. 7.55 News. 8.00 News. 8.05 News. 8.10 News. 8.15 News. 8.20 News. 8.25 News. 8.30 News. 8.35 News. 8.40 News. 8.45 News. 8.50 News. 8.55 News. 9.00 News. 9.05 News. 9.10 News. 9.15 News. 9.20 News. 9.25 News. 9.30 News. 9.35 News. 9.40 News. 9.45 News. 9.50 News. 9.55 News. 10.00 News. 10.05 News. 10.10 News. 10.15 News. 10.20 News. 10.25 News. 10.30 News. 10.35 News. 10.40 News. 10.45 News. 10.50 News. 10.55 News. 11.00 News. 11.05 News. 11.10 News. 11.15 News. 11.20 News. 11.25 News. 11.30 News. 11.35 News. 11.40 News. 11.45 News. 11.50 News. 11.55 News. 12.00 News. 12.05 News. 12.10 News. 12.15 News. 12.20 News. 12.25 News. 12.30 News. 12.35 News. 12.40 News. 12.45 News. 12.50 News. 12.55 News. 1.00 News. 1.05 News. 1.10 News. 1.15 News. 1.20 News. 1.25 News. 1.30 News. 1.35 News. 1.40 News. 1.45 News. 1.50 News. 1.55 News. 2.00 News. 2.05 News. 2.10 News. 2.15 News. 2.20 News. 2.25 News. 2.30 News. 2.35 News. 2.40 News. 2.45 News. 2.50 News. 2.55 News. 3.00 News. 3.05 News. 3.10 News. 3.15 News. 3.20 News. 3.25 News. 3.30 News. 3.35 News. 3.40 News. 3.45 News. 3.50 News. 3.55 News. 4.00 News. 4.05 News. 4.10 News. 4.15 News. 4.20 News. 4.25 News. 4.30 News. 4.35 News. 4.40 News. 4.45 News. 4.50 News. 4.55 News. 5.00 News. 5.05 News. 5.10 News. 5.15 News. 5.20 News. 5.25 News. 5.30 News. 5.35 News. 5.40 News. 5.45 News. 5.50 News. 5.55 News. 6.00 News. 6.05 News. 6.10 News. 6.15 News. 6.20 News. 6.25 News. 6.30 News. 6.35 News. 6.40 News. 6.45 News. 6.50 News. 6.55 News. 7.00 News. 7.05 News. 7.10 News. 7.15 News. 7.20 News. 7.25 News. 7.30 News. 7.35 News. 7.40 News. 7.45 News. 7.50 News. 7.55 News. 8.00 News. 8.05 News. 8.10 News. 8.15 News. 8.20 News. 8.25 News. 8.30 News. 8.35 News. 8.40 News. 8.45 News. 8.50 News. 8.55 News. 9.00 News. 9.05 News. 9.10 News. 9.15 News. 9.20 News. 9.25 News. 9.30 News. 9.35 News. 9.40 News. 9.45 News. 9.50 News. 9.55 News. 10.00 News. 10.05 News. 10.10 News. 10.15 News. 10.20 News. 10.25 News. 10.30 News. 10.35 News. 10.40 News. 10.45 News. 10.50 News. 10.55 News. 11.00 News. 11.05 News. 11.10 News. 11.15 News. 11.20 News. 11.25 News. 11.30 News. 11.35 News. 11.40 News. 11.45 News. 11.50 News. 11.55 News. 12.00 News. 12.05 News. 12.10 News. 12.15 News. 12.20 News. 12.25 News. 12.30 News. 12.35 News. 12.40 News. 12.45 News. 12.50 News. 12.55 News. 1.00 News. 1.05 News. 1.10 News. 1.15 News. 1.20 News. 1.25 News. 1.30 News. 1.35 News. 1.40 News. 1.45 News. 1.50 News. 1.55 News. 2.00 News. 2.05 News. 2.10 News. 2.15 News. 2.20 News. 2.25 News. 2.30 News. 2.35 News. 2.40 News. 2.45 News. 2.50 News. 2.55 News. 3.00 News. 3.05 News. 3.10 News. 3.15 News. 3.20 News. 3.25 News. 3.30 News. 3.35 News. 3.40 News. 3.45 News. 3.50 News. 3.55 News. 4.00 News. 4.05 News. 4.10 News. 4.15 News. 4.20 News. 4.25 News. 4.30 News. 4.35 News. 4.40 News. 4.45 News. 4.50 News. 4.55 News. 5.00 News. 5.05 News. 5.10 News. 5.15 News. 5.20 News. 5.25 News. 5.30 News. 5.35 News. 5.40 News. 5.45 News. 5.50 News. 5.55 News. 6.00 News. 6.05 News. 6.10 News. 6.15 News. 6.20 News. 6.25 News. 6.30 News. 6.35 News. 6.40 News. 6.45 News. 6.50 News. 6.55 News. 7.00 News. 7.05 News. 7.10 News. 7.15 News. 7.20 News. 7.25 News. 7.30 News. 7.35 News. 7.40 News. 7.45 News. 7.50 News. 7.55 News. 8.00 News. 8.05 News. 8.10 News. 8.15 News. 8.20 News. 8.25 News. 8.30 News. 8.35 News. 8.40 News. 8.45 News. 8.50 News. 8.55 News. 9.00 News. 9.05 News. 9.10 News. 9.15 News. 9.20 News. 9.25 News. 9.30 News. 9.35 News. 9.40 News. 9.45 News. 9.50 News. 9.55 News. 10.00 News. 10.05 News. 10.10 News. 10.15 News. 10.20 News. 10.25 News. 10.30 News. 10.35 News. 10.40 News. 10.45 News. 10.50 News. 10.55 News. 11.00 News. 11.05 News. 11.10 News. 11.15 News. 11.20 News. 11.25 News. 11.30 News. 11.35 News. 11.40 News. 11.45 News. 11.50 News. 11.55 News. 12.00 News. 12.05 News. 12.10 News. 12.15 News. 12.20 News. 12.25 News. 12.30 News. 12.35 News. 12.40 News. 12.45 News. 12.50 News. 12.55 News. 1.00 News. 1.05 News. 1.10 News. 1.15 News. 1.20 News. 1.25 News. 1.30 News. 1.35 News. 1.40 News. 1.45 News. 1.50 News. 1.55 News. 2.00 News. 2.05 News. 2.10 News. 2.15 News. 2.20 News. 2.25 News. 2.30 News. 2.35 News. 2.40 News. 2.45 News. 2.50 News. 2.55 News. 3.00 News. 3.05 News. 3.10 News. 3.15 News. 3.20 News. 3.25 News. 3.30 News. 3.35 News. 3.40 News. 3.45 News. 3.50 News. 3.55 News. 4.00 News. 4.05 News. 4.10 News. 4.15 News. 4.20 News. 4.25 News. 4.30 News. 4.35 News. 4.40 News. 4.45 News. 4.50 News. 4.55 News. 5.00 News. 5.05 News. 5.10 News. 5.15 News. 5.20 News. 5.25 News. 5.30 News. 5.35 News. 5.40 News. 5.45 News. 5.50 News. 5.55 News. 6.00 News. 6.05 News. 6.10 News. 6.15 News. 6.20 News. 6.25 News. 6.30 News. 6.35 News. 6.40 News. 6.45 News. 6.50 News. 6.55 News. 7.00 News. 7.05 News. 7.10 News. 7.15 News. 7.20 News. 7.25 News. 7.30 News. 7.35 News. 7.40 News. 7.45 News. 7.50 News. 7.55 News. 8.00 News. 8.05 News. 8.10 News. 8.15 News. 8.20 News. 8.25 News. 8.30 News. 8.35 News. 8.40 News. 8.45 News. 8.50 News. 8.55 News. 9.00 News. 9.05 News. 9.10 News. 9.15 News. 9.20 News. 9.25 News. 9.30 News. 9.35 News. 9.40 News. 9.45 News. 9.50 News. 9.55 News. 10.00

Cut price farms takeover plan by Labour

By Anthony Bevins, Political Correspondent

The Labour Party is considering a policy for the nationalization of all tenanted farmland with compensation paid on the basis of agricultural rather than market value.

A second draft chapter on food and agriculture, fisheries and forestry policy, to be considered for inclusion in Labour's Programme 1982, says that public ownership of land has always been an integral part of Labour philosophy.

"Land ownership in this country can bring with it inestimable and unjustifiable power and influence for a tiny minority of our citizens — a minority whose interests are frequently in direct conflict with the good of the community," the paper says.

"Only through the public ownership and control of land will we be able to eliminate that power and influence."

But the document states that the issue is "not simply a question of dogma", nationalization will also help to create a better, more economic farming structure.

"The present structure of farms is the result of a long process of buying and selling — not to mention outright confiscation."

"No attempt has ever been made, over a large area, to create sound economic units suitable for varying conditions. Thousands of farms are made up of two or more quite separate parcels of land. Indeed, areas can be cited where well over half the holdings are in this category."

The party executive's food and agriculture sub-committee proposed the setting-up of a rural land authority, on the lines of a nationalized industry board, which would administer the state's farmland through area centres responsible for day-to-day estate management.

The sub-committee does not, however, make a firm recommendation on nationalization priority.

One formula hints at procrastination, saying: "The acute bringing into public ownership of agricultural land will clearly not be an easy process." Further consideration is suggested.

The alternative formula is more positive. It says: "We believe that it is vital that the next Labour government moves quickly to provide a large publicly-owned sector of farmland."

"This would be achieved largely through the acquisition of the existing tenanted estates, but additional land would be acquired where its purchase created more rational boundaries for the national estate."

"Farming units would also be acquired where owners chose to relinquish the ownership of land instead of paying tax."

The paper says the question of compensation "is perhaps the most difficult we have to tackle in this area of policy."

It is said that the Labour Party did not embrace a policy of confiscation, "despite the fact that many of the present landlords derive their ownership from compensation by their predecessors."

Nevertheless, compensation could not be paid on the basis of current market values, but would be based on the lower, agricultural value.

The agricultural paper is one of a number of policy documents to be submitted to a special meeting of Labour's national executive on May 19. The executive will finalize the draft of Labour's programme 1982, expected to run to about 200 printed pages, and that document will be presented to the party conference at Blackpool in the autumn.

Call for animal ban, page 2

Boy trapped in flue

Marc Barrie, aged six, of Irvine, Ayrshire, spent three hours trapped in a narrow flue near the top of a 20-foot chimney on a building site on Saturday before police and firemen freed him.

Search operation

A kidney transplant operation was carried out on a boy, at the Royal Hospital in Liverpool, on Saturday, after a city-wide search for the patient. John Kendrick, aged 14, was shopping, when a suitable kidney became available.

33 killed in Italian antiques fair fire

Todi, Italy April 25 — A flash fire started by an explosion killed at least 33 people and injured scores of others attending an antiques exhibition at a 16th century country house 78 miles northwest of Rome.

At least 40 of the estimated 200 people at the exhibition jumped from the top floor of the building on to a lorry, some of them injuring themselves seriously.

Fire fighters said they were still counting the victims and believed that the death toll could go as high as 45. No foreigners were believed to be among the dead or injured.

Signor Paolo Pianigiani, a reporter from the local radio station across the road said: "There was a tremendous explosion which shook the entire area. For a minute we thought it was an earthquake. Then we saw smoke, fire and there was screaming."

"Fire spread quickly and the heat was so intense... I saw a bronze statue literally melt," he said.

Police officials said the fire was touched off by an explosion, possibly caused by a gas leak, at a bar on the third floor.

The fire spread quickly because of the inflammability of the paintings, tapestries and other art objects in the building. The initial damage estimate from local officials was more than 1,000 million lire (£560,000). The injured were taken to hospitals in Perugia and at least six others were flown to two police helicopters to a centre in Rome for treatment.

Signor Giuseppe Ambrerli, a civil defence official, said there were no fire engines in Todi, a town of 18,000 people when the fire broke out at 11am.

"Three fire engines had to come from Perugia, 45 kilometers away, and more than 40 minutes elapsed before the rescue effort got under way," he said.

The blaze was brought under control nearly four hours later, with the aid of helicopters spraying water on to the building.

There was no immediate explanation why there were no fire engines on duty. Thirty-one bodies were pulled out of the debris and taken to a church near by for identification. Two people died later in hospital.

Blackbirds with a difference

Two albino blackbirds which fell out of their nest are being helped to survive by a girl aged eight.

Donna-Ana Wells (above), of King's Road, Gorleston, Norfolk, helps her father, Mr James Wells, to feed them with worms, bread and milk, a task that has to be repeated every 30 minutes between 5 am and midnight.

Mr Wells, a bird lover, fears that the three-week old birds' chances of survival are slight if released too soon. But he is also considering building an aviary in his back garden where they can continue their sheltered existence.

The Norfolk and Suffolk Wildlife Trust has been giving advice to Mr Wells, who is a catering manager for North Sea oil rigs, recovering from a back injury.

Union blacks task force war film

Continued from page 1

There has been a dispute about the privatization of film production by the COL. This work has been put out to private companies and 27 of our members have been made redundant. We opposed that. That blacking has been extended to all government film material. We were approached by the Navy on the grounds that this was a national emergency, and would we find a way round the blacking. Our committee said yes, if they sit and negotiate. This they refused to do.

Work on about 40 government films has been disrupted by the technicians' action, including a feature on Britain's nuclear deterrent. The Ministry of Defence could not confirm or deny last night whether the blacking of Falklands Islands film was hampering the information war.

A different front, unions have welcomed the ministry's postponement "for a short period" of immediate planned redundancies at Portsmouth and Chatham dockyard. Under closure plans, 4,300 jobs are due to go this year. But, while the redundancy policy is based "remains valid" the ministry said: "When the dust has settled, we will be considering whether there are any lessons to be learned from the Falklands crisis, to see whether any adjustments may be necessary within our overall plans."

The woman, who calls herself Liberty, told 73-year-old Mr John Burn over his shoulder: "Dear John, I will play some music for you while you get your tape recorder ready."

She played a Beatles tune and then went on: "I am glad you're recording the programme and I hope you find it interesting."

She referred to the helicopter crash and then played some more music. She carried on with the usual propaganda broadcast, accusing Britain of attacking a friendly country and then addressed Mr Burn, saying: "I hope he had enjoyed listening to her."

Argentine Annie sends her thanks

□ The Argentine equivalent of Tokyo Rose, who has been broadcasting to the British task force, yesterday put over a personal message to a businessman in Britain who first picked up her propaganda talk last week.

Israelis weep as flag is lowered in Sinai

From Christopher Walker, Sharm el Sheikh, April 25

Scores of male and female Israeli soldiers wept openly, and sometimes uncontrollably, today as the Star of David was lowered for the last time over Sinai, the desert peninsula conquered in 1967 and subsequently transformed by more than 28,000 Israeli immigrants.

Soon after the emotional ceremony ended, a slow-moving convoy of coaches, army vehicles and lorries began to make the last journey northwards to meet the deadline for the final withdrawal which marks the completion of the first stage in the peace process begun at Camp David.

The Hebrew posters affixed to the front of almost every vehicle told their own story about the feelings of most Israelis over the loss of the Sinai. "We did not retreat. We gave it up for peace," said one. Another bore the dignified message: "With pain, pride and hope we say goodbye to Sinai." More simplistic was a third which stated: "Sharm, we love you."

As the departing troops drove through this strategic Red Sea port, the number of Israeli outnumbers for the first time in almost 15 years. The few foreign journalists permitted into the area were constantly greeted from the sides of the road by the new arrivals with enthusiastic waves and cries of "Welcome to Egypt!"

Already the Egyptians have taken over the Marina hotel at nearby Naama Bay, as well as many of the 500 white stucco flats which jut out on a spectacular promontory overlooking the sea.

For the most part, the final withdrawal was handled with the maximum of emotion and the minimum of ill feeling.

The Israeli soldiers and officers I spoke to mirrored views expressed by many civilians in the country, that the withdrawal, and indeed the whole peace treaty with Egypt, was a gamble which had to be risked. But none could disguise their deep grief.

The mood was perhaps best summed up during a dinner given to the remaining troops last night by Brigadier-General Aharon, commander of the region. "My son is 15 and in three years he will join the army," he told his men. "Then he is sure to ask whether people of my generation did everything that we could to see we do not have another war. I want to be able to look him straight in the face with a clear eye and say: 'Yes'."

□ Tel Aviv: The Israeli convoy took along some 200 civilian last-ditch opponents of the peace treaty and of the withdrawal but it was not clear they had them all (Moshe Brilliant writes).

The Stop the Withdrawal Movement claimed some of its activists were still hiding in the ghost settlements.

Leaders of the militants announced today they planned to continue their struggle for the recovery of Sinai as a political party or in some other form to be determined later. Their plan was ridiculed by Dr Yehuda Ben-Meir, Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs, who is a leader of the National Religious Party and a former supporter of the militants. He said the recovery of Sinai would require another war against Egypt and 99 per cent of the people were against this.

Mr Menachem Begin, the Prime Minister, said the evacuation was the hardest, most painful, most complex and most delicate mission ever imposed on an Israeli minister.

Egypt no longer in black book, page 4

Leading article, page 9

Sadat dream fulfilled

Cairo, April 25 — President Mubarak put a wreath on the tomb of his predecessor, Anwar Sadat today to mark the fulfilment of the assassinated leader's dream of the return of Egyptian sovereignty to Sinai.

The ceremony at the tomb, a few yards from the spot where President Sadat was assassinated on October 6 last year was the first of a series of low-key observances to mark Israel's withdrawal from the peninsula after 15 years of occupation.

Even as the ceremonies were taking place, it was still unknown how the last dispute over the Egyptian-Israeli border would be resolved. American, Egyptian and Israeli negotiators were to meet to discuss a formula to reach a settlement over Tabá, a 1,000-square yard area on the Gulf of Aqaba coast south-west of the Israeli port of Eilat.

A meeting in Cairo late last night ended without progress, officials said — AP.

THE TIMES INFORMATION SERVICE

Today's events

Royal engagements
Princess Margaret attends the Royal Caledonian Ball at Grosvenor House Hotel, 9.35

New Exhibitions
The Merseyside Guild of Porters: an exhibition of hand built and wheel thrown pottery and ceramics. Atkinson Art Gallery, Lord Street, Southport; Mon to Fri 10 to 5, Thurs and Sat 10 to 5; (until May 22).
Sculptures by Anthony Caro, Huddersfield Art Gallery, Mon to

Fri 10 to 6, Sat 10 to 4; (until May 23).

Images for Disarmament: photo montages by Peter Kennard, Phoenix Arts, Newark Street, Leicester; Mon to Sat 10 to 6; (until May 16).

RSA Annual Exhibition, Royal Scottish Academy, Edinburgh; Mon to Sat 10 to 5, Sun 2 to 5; (until May 25).

Paintings by André Bicat and carved and pierced porcelain by Maggie Barnes and others. Baines Gallery, 13 Station Road, Rensley-on-Thames, Oxfordshire; Mon to Sat 10 to 5.30, closed Wed and Sun; (until May 20).

The Times Crossword Puzzle No 15,815

- ACROSS
- Do canine imitation and get the bird? (7).
 - Pedlar or deck hand? (7).
 - Note car number (5).
 - By which Oberon unhappily met Titania? (9).
 - Falling to keep record about wrong-doing (6).
 - Countryside feature in SE England — or Ulster? (8).
 - Gave a hand to someone (5).
 - Meddle with one rent-free building (9).
 - In the eighth one, for example (9).
 - 504 to retreat — just a bit off course (5).
 - Unkind interpretation of a Beethoven sonata? (8).
 - Excuse some beggar's request (6).
 - In cancellation of written work doctor finds an opening (6).
 - Singer sees start of party — a dry one (5).
 - Globe for instance showing all the world (7).
 - Pat's still content? (7).
- DOWN
- Where service-men were behind the lines? (9).
 - Plant used in stage transformation (7).
 - A number go to church in Devon (9).
 - Sort of stone fruit? (4).
 - Outstanding feature for my French politician (10).
 - Stop in Panama city (5).
 - Get a man to replace a powerful one (7).
 - Celebrated college put up many (5).
 - Deal gets underworld approval? (10).
 - Cleveland racecourse favourite's ceremonial welcome (13, 6).
 - Green connexion applied for by imposter (9).
 - Blue mat possibly may be changed (7).
 - Star of French film "The Centaur"? (7).
 - Quiet mill-stream by the fold (5).
 - Precise, like Dora, initially (5).
 - Lament for mini-piano (4).

The Solution of Saturday's Prize Puzzle No 15,814 will appear next Saturday

Screenprints by three artists

Gallery 2, Bolton Museum and Art Gallery, Le Mans Crescent, Bolton, Lancashire; Mon to Fri 9.30 to 5.30, Sat 10 to 5, closed Wed and Sun; (until May 16).

Landscapes: photographs by Oswald Jones, Canterbury Cathedral; daily until 7; (until May 15).

Worktown: drawings by Falcon Hildred of industrial revolution towns; Industrial Museum, Moor-side Road, Bradford; Tues to Sat 10 to 5; (until June 5).

Waterways: Waterways Exhibition, Town Hall, Newbury, Berkshire; 10 to 5 weekdays, 11 to 4 Mon to Fri (until May 3).

India Observed, Library Gallery, 14, Victoria Road, Albert Museum; Mon-Sat 10 to 5.45, Sun 2.30 to 5.45, closed Fri from today until July 4.

Exhibitions in progress
Art of the book in India: British Library, Great Russell Street, WC1; Mon to Fri 9.30 to 5.30, Sat 10 to 1 (until May 8).

Paintings based primarily on Welsh landscapes by Tom Nash, Gallery 10, Grosvenor Street, W1; Mon to Fri 10 to 5.30, Sat 10 to 1, closed Sundays (until May 4).

The Gloucester Railway Carriage and Wagon Company since 1860, Gloucester Folk Museum, 99-103 Westgate Street; Mon to Sat 10 to 5, Sun 2 to 5, (until May 29).

Watercolours by Stephen Oiler of court houses built between 1824 and 1966; a retrospective photographic exhibition of work by Neil Newton, exhibition of contemporary prints by leading Canadian artists; all at Guildford House Gallery, 155 High Street, Guildford, Surrey; Mon to Sat 10.30 to 5, (until May 1).

Out of the shadows, contemporary Irish photography; Ulster Museum, Botanic Gardens, Belfast; Mon to Sat 10 to 5, Sun 2 to 5, closed Fridays. Until May 31.

Music
Humphrey Lyttelton in concert, Castle Park Leisure Centre, Bangor, Northern Ireland.

Walks
London's ghosts, alleys and oddities, guided by Embankment Underground, 7.30.

With Shakespeare and Dickens in Southwark, meet Borough Underground, 10.30.

Parliament today
Commons (2.30): Finance Bill, committee, second day. Lords (2.30): Shops Bill, third reading. Copyright Act, 1956 (Amendment) Bill, third reading. Debate on EEC competition practice and debate on A320 Airbus.

Discount stamps
Stamps at a discount go on sale this week when the Post Office begins to distribute coupons giving a 15p reduction on a book of 10 first or second class stamps. The "15p off" offer, a reduction of about 10 per cent on a book of stamps, ends on May 31.

The pound

	Bank	Buy	Sell
Australia $	1.75	1.67
Austria Sch	31.35	29.35
Belgium Fr	91.25	86.25
Canada $	2.24	2.15
Denmark Kr	14.99	14.24
Ireland P	1.26	1.21
France F	11.53	10.93
Germany DM	4.43	4.18
Greece Dr	115.50	108.50
Hong Kong $	10.70	10.10
Italy Lir	2395.00	2295.00
Japan Yen	456.00	430.00
Netherlands G	4.91	4.65
Norway Kr	11.25	10.65
Portugal Esc	133.00	126.00
South Africa Rd	2.25	2.08
Spain Ptas	192.00	182.00
Sweden Kr	10.96	10.36
Switzerland Fr	3.66	3.44
USA $	1.83	1.76
Yugoslavia Dnr	98.00	92.00

Londons: The FT Index closed down 1.97 at 567.1 on Friday. New York: The Dow Jones industrial average closed at 862.16, up 9.04.

Nature notes

More summer visitors are arriving from Africa. Garden warblers sing quietly in woods and parks; hedge warblers are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bubbling song in ditchside hedges. House martins wheel round the eaves again. The first sparrow migrants to start nesting are the chaffinches. They are easy to notice, since they call constantly as they approach the branches where they are building, unlike the willow warblers, which have an almost identical alarm call, but only use it when feeding their young. Starlings are building their big ragged bub